This is BESEROVIA, a Diplomacy 'zine which is afflicted with rampant senility. It chronicles the progress of #1969BQ as well as (when I can't get out of it) 1969G. Game #1969BQ is being played out by a collection of oops who got into UCSD when Ronnie the Billious was looking the other way.

Subscriptions are 10 for $1 (free to players in #1969BQ and 5s a copy by hand delivery at UCSD). This is Pandemonium Publication #108, and was edited and published by Rod Walker, 5058

Harley Blvd., San Diego CA 92116; 'phone, 282-1921. The aforementioned is a member of the Games Bureau of the National Fantasy Fan Federation and of the Diplomacy Division thereof, and also of the Diplomacy Society of the International Federation of War-gamers.

IF NOMINATED, I WILL NOT RUN...

1. House Rules. The latest edition of my House-Rules is hot off the presses. If you would like a copy, please ask me.

2. Move Deadline. On the day of the deadline, I may not be on campus in the afternoon. You can, of course, 'phone your moves to me at home, but I will only accept them if I have not typed the move results yet. If I have, it's too late. Better you should get moves in during the day.

3. New Game. Due to all sorts of pressure, I am going to open a new game, for UCSD people only. The first 7 applicants will be accepted. However, please note that there will be a game fee associated with this one. The fee for the game is a mere $1, payable in advance. That's one Yankee dollar, you-all...

NEWS OF THE WORLD

ADDIS ABABA (3 September 1903): Emperor Menelik II of Ethiopia today announced the signing of a treaty making Italy an Ethiopian protectorate. His Grace, the Duke of Bel Paese, Italy's Ambassador to Ethiopia, confirmed the terms of the treaty, which also granted Sicily and Sardinia to Ethiopia as colonies. Emperor Menelik has promised to send several thousand Galla tribesmen, armed with poisoned spears, to an undisclosed location for the protection of Italy. The Duke also confidently predicted that King Guillermo will sign the treaty. In blood.

LONDON (25 September 1903): Kaiser Wilhelm II today gave thanks for His deliverance from the English fleet in Westminster Cathedral. His Majesty then reviewed the London Fleet, which consisted of the Imperial yacht, two schooners, a garbage scow, and a rowboat. "Don't laugh!" the Kaiser exclaimed to reporters, "After all, this is the fleet, We have captured London. Soon, We assure you, We will have figured out what to do with it."

MOSKOW, NORWAY (23 September 1903): Reports reaching this remote British outpost indicate that Admiral Ethelbert Pince-Nez has scored a stunning victory in northern Russia. Taking Murmansk in a daring dawn attack against several fishwives and an old man digging clams, the Admiral ordered his marines to undertake and overtake a train to Novgorod and to St. Petersburg itself, the capital of Russia. Reports indicate the Russian Empire was taken completely by surprise, and Admiral Pince-Nez was welcomed in the Winter Palace. He had started out in the Summer Palace, but when he went for a walk in the garden, he was squirted by some hidden fountain. "Blue--and, as is well known in Whitehall, the mere suggestion of water is enough to make the Admiral seasick. This is why, of course, the Admiral commands an army..."

VIENNA (25 September 1903): The Empress Maria-Theresa II today expressed surprise that she was still in Her own capital. "We cannot believe," She commented, "that We are allowed to keep so much of Our own realm. All of Our neighbors are most anxious to protect Us, and have done so well at this that We have not gained a single inch in three years of war."

Her Majesty then attended a Gala Festival Concert in the Imperial Opera House, arranged in honor of the liberation of Trieste. On the program were: "The Migration of the House Overture, by Ludwig von Turnipgreens"; "The House, an Oratorio by Georg Fledermaus Doorknabe"; "Symphony #32, 'The Fat', Op. 1, by Moll Ein Zwei Bach"; and, finally, the Imperial Opera shall produce "Mozart", by W. A. Zauberflaute.

STAMBUL (3 October 1903): Witnesses to the titanic battle near here between French and Turkish fleets are already comparing it to the Accident Near Cowflap Hill, and other famous naval encounters. Reports are that the French and Turkish dreadnoughts Louis XVI and Selim the Sot respectively--came to grips so close that their nearsighted admirals could see each others' flags. The French then high-tailed it back to their home ports.

BERLIN (3 October 1903): The Kaiser is reported to be in high spirits, despite reports of unwashed Russians poring into His domains. "Just wait," Wilhelm assured the General Staff, "just wait until Steiner's army starts to move..."

MOSCOW (5 October 1903): The Kremlin today denied that any Cossacks or other Russian forces nor on the western front have ever been ordered to wash. "All of them were, however, strictly enjoined to rub down with garlic. If anyone says they did not smell better after that just doesn't understand."

PARIS (17 October 1903): The French General Staff today released a summary of military progress around the world:

1. Grand Assault on Brussels: Shot into the ground.
2. Massive Push on Disseldorf: Stomped on.
3. Glorious March on Turin: Pronged.
4. Terrifying Threats Against Our Enemies: Laughed at.

ANNOUNCEMENT: Aunt Lucretia answers your Diplomacy Problems.

Uncle: Aunt Lucretia: How do I get the GM to stop poking fun at me and taking things I do or say the wrong way? This is making me very nervous. Do not sign anything, or everybody will know. Just sign me: A Simple Enir."

Aunt Simple: Well, at least you know who you are. Anyway, have you ever thought of visiting countries? It is very relaxing. If pain persists, see your psychoanalyst. I'll be happy to know, by the way, that UCSD has engaged the services of Lucy Van Housen. She is about your speed, too."
