BERLIN: The German government wishes to promote peace and harmony with all its neighbors and to the rest of the world.
 BELGIUM-WORLD: Our small nation humbly requests the presence of English troops to protect our people and leaders from the horrors of war. We hope that France, Germany, and the rest of the world comply with our request.

GERMANY-WORLD: For all those who asked, I think Mike Masche and I have met once. And as long as he's not in Tyrolia, we are friends. If he is in Tyro, well...I know where he lives and I'll be waiting at his door with a 2x4 about right now.

ENGLAND-BELGIUM: His Majesty grants Belgium's request and asks France and Germany to comply, calling the entire diplomatic community as a witness.

BAKKO-GM: Hey--that crayon bit was a nice touch. Doesn't Frauke let you play with sharp objects yet?

LONDON-WORLD: The people of the British Isles are horrified at the hostile and warlike steps presently being taken by European powers. His Majesty offers himself and members of his diplomatic corps as possible mediators to avoid outright conflict. Until then, the British Navy has been mobilized and sent to critical defensive positions around the Isle. Although Parliament and the King have gone on record with their hopes that this impasse will be short lived, the British government refuses to return its forces to peaceful status until it is made certain that the English people are safe.

MUN-LON: Madlads? Me--a Madlad? Suh; I buhlieve someone has been telling you scandalous lies about me. Mistuh Hanson here will vouch for mah integrity as a honest and forthright citizen! ((Hell, he's more than forthright. He's right at least a third of the time...))

STP-ROME: What else can you do? Dozens of things! You can harass France, or skip into Munich, or battle into Trieste, or convoy into Syria. You can stand on your head and make phone calls to Jane Fonda. For the price of a gamefee you can go to a nightclub, take the bus to Topeka, see a ball game, or feed the entire country of Ethiopia for a week.
