Press For The Above

Army Denmark shouts obscenities at the British fleets while holding its nose at the smell (read as a hold if you don't print such drivel.) ((We print almost anything but not in the moves as it causes them to become hard to read.))

From the GERMAN BETTER HOMES UND GARTEN cook book/ Limie Beans, all rotten...First, take 3,000 British sailors fresh from a long voyage in the north atlantic. Mix with 3 cup rum, stir well and place in evens for three years of untill dark brown and crispy. Hold nose and remove from stove. Place contents in trash container and remove from house. Then you have Limie Beans all rotten, also known as garbage a la Carleton.

Munich to Paris/ We are glad that your grape stomping, cheeze-wiz-sing troops managed to stop their wine sodden advance short of our glorious empire. Realizing the quality of your side of the family, Premeir Geiger, one wonders how you even trained these clods to do anything other than chase women and trip over their shoe laces. We do hope that this does not impair diplomatic relations between you clods in France and our lovely country. Love, your brother...

((Gee, he lost his accent and learned how to type.))

Walker/ you want us to use slashes? OK, you asked for it //

/////////////////I could go on and on and on and on ...

Munich to Budapest/ Why no word? Sorry about Tyrolia but you should write to your friends so things can be worked out. Still can if you learn to loose your silent sickness. Nothing personal, Ron, just haven't heard from you. What about FE?

A PRESS RELEASE FROM HEAVEN/ Today God (AM) declared that we need help in getting subs. The only one this was from God's aunt, I wonder what that makes her, an angel?

THE COLUMN

The issue of AR you are holding in your hands is pretty skimpy, in fact you are looking at the complete contents, the rest is the Briefing Room. But don't worry we didn't have the heart to charge you guys for this so called issue, we even debated on whether or not to send you a dime in each issue, but decided against it because of the high cost of postage. We do have excuses however, and contrary to all beleifs this zine will last out the year if I have to hand write every copy and send them out at my own expense. Our first excuse is that we are basically lazy and didn't get around to putting this issue together ahead of time. A pretty lame excuse and one not to be used in the future, by us. But the main part of our story is that finals are coming up and we have to devote ourselves to studying. Even so you might think that our editor could have taken up the slack and gone to work, well he did go to work but not on the zine he got another job. So nobody did do the zine, we all thought that someone else was. But don't worry, before next issue comes out finals will be over, school will be out and we will have lots of time to devote to the zine. It should be a very large issue. We will have at least six game reviews, two long ones on the same game by different people and four short ones by me. We will also have a book review or two, the column, Alternate Realities and editorials. Maybe some letters, and of course we are going to have the ending to the Steelmen story. Plus two or three other stories, and the results of the games naturally.

Again this issue is being sent to you at no charge. Be happy with it, I never got anything free in my life. We still have Multiverse on sale for a very inexpensive fifty cents, and we still would like to get a story from all of our contributors who have had stories printed in AR in the past. Or even from some new people, come on, this zine is only as good as you make it, that may sound corny but since about a quarter of our stuff is from outside contributors it's true. See ya--Walker Barnes.
