Random Notes

Welcome to the 104th issue of CCC. This issue is brought to you by the letter M (the only key to ever stop working on my old computer...) and the number 471. We have the usual bill of fare; the games — one more of which ends this issue, a ship history, and the letter column. Of course, you are bad readers; not enough of you have signed up for games so you must be punished: you may read, if you so dare, a bad-sort-of-love poem on page 4. Your comments about this, and all other zine related matters, are, as always, welcome.

This issue is dedicated to two of my friends, Jimmy Turner and Melanie Pirie, who have managed to get their in the local paper for all the wrong reasons. Jimmy was killed on July 18 in a car crash; I had hung out with him (and the girl that was driving the car) until 5:00 am the previous Friday night. He was suppose to meet me at Gallery Crawl (the art galleries stay open late the first and third Fridays of the month in Charlotte; this amounts to an excuse to hangout, drink beer, talk to friends, and actually, sometimes, look at art) on Friday the 18th, to return a tape of a radio show he had borrowed, and throw me some blank tape so I could record a few things for him...

Melanie, meanwhile, managed to get her name in the paper for a different reason: she was a crime victim who's attacker served too little crime and hurt someone else. Four years ago, Mel was driving home when a 17 year-old kid randomly attacked her in her garage with a baseball bat. Melanie suffered multiple skull fractures and permanently lost her sense of smell. She was 18 at the time. Her attacker plead guilty to assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, inflicting serious injury and felony breaking and entering. He served two years in jail. He was just arrested for picking up three 14-year old girls, taking them to a deserted area, making them strip, beating them, and raping at least one of them. He is the prime suspect in two other kidnappings. Does this anger and sadden me? More than you can imagine.

Before we get to the letter column, a few hobby-related notes. DipCon this year is the weekend of August 22 - 24 in Seattle. For more infor-

The Washington Naval Treaty

As World War I ended, both Japan and the United States had recently started large scale naval build-ups, inspired both by the war and their own ambitions. The British response, by the early 1920s, was inevitable; no other power could be allowed to rule the seas, so a new ship building program was on tap as well. A new naval arms race was forthcoming, which, ultimately, none of the powers involved could really afford. The extreme human cost of World War I had also produced a desire for a lasting international peace. In 1921, the United States invited Great Britain, Japan, France, and Italy to a conference in Washington to limit future naval construction. An international agreement to restrict ship building was soon agreed to; this became known as the Washington Treaty.

The Washington Naval Conference of 1921-1922 was the first modern arms limitation agreement. The conference defined what constituted a "capital ship" (essentially, a battleship or battlecruiser): either a displacement of over 10,000 tons or guns over 8 inches in size. In addition, no capital ship could exceed 35,000 tons. A ten year moratorium was also imposed on new capital ship construction. A maximum total battle fleet strength limit was also agreed to for the United States and Britain. Japan was allowed 60 percent of this amount, while Italy and France were allowed 35 percent. As a practical matter, the United States was allowed to keep 18 battleships. The Royal Navy had 17 battleships and four battlecruisers, though its average age was higher and per ship fire power was lower than the American fleet. (Total guns: U.S: 24 16-inch, 104 14-inch, 44 12-inch, Great Britain: 100 15-inch, 78 13.5 inch, Japan: 16 16-inch, 80 14-inch.) Neither Italy nor France, countries whose large ship construction was essentially halted during the war, could fill their quotas with modern ships.

As might be imaged, there were a few exceptions to the general rules. Britain was allowed to keep the 42,000 ton battlecruiser Hood, and build two new 35,000 battleships (HMS Rodney and Nelson). Some, but not all, of the ships under construction could be finished. For the United States, for example, only three of the four planned Colorado class battleships could be retained. The Washington, though three quarters complete and already launched, was sunk as a target to comply with the treaty.

Also covered by the treaty were aircraft carriers. Here a size maximum (33,000 tons) and total tonnage limits were imposed. The top three powers would be allowed to convert ships into carriers. For Britain, this meant the large, fast, underarmored "light battlecruisers" Glorious and Courageous would become carriers. The U.S. converted the incomplete battlecruisers Lexington and Saratoga into carriers, while Japan's conversions were the Akagi and Kaga. Carriers also could not carry guns over 8-inches in size. (The Kaga, Akagi, Lexington, and Saratoga were so armed.) The Washington Treaty imposed no limits on the construction of cruisers or smaller ships, other than the 10,000 ton and 8-inch gun limits.

Predictably, with battleship construction banned and carrier construction limited, attention turned to what could be built: cruisers. Britain, the United States, and Japan all had a severe need for large, ocean going cruisers, and no limits existed on such ships. (The Royal Navy, with vast amounts of ocean to cover, only had four truly modern ocean-going cruisers in service or under construction in 1922. The situation was worse in Japan and the U.S.)

The 10,000 ton/8-inch limit became, effectively, both a maximum and minimum size restriction in the 1920s: one could not build (legally) a ship over 10,000 tons, but there was little point in building a smaller ship, which would be outgunned by any possible enemy. The heavy cruiser, as such ships were called, became virtually the only type of warship built in the 1920s, with each navy building as many ships as they could afford.

So, far from ending naval arms competition, the Washington Naval Conference merely changed its nature, from a contest to create as big a battle fleet as possible to a contest to build as many big, fast cruisers as you could. The real constraint was just money. In the 1920s, Great Britain and the U.S. each built 15 heavy cruisers while Japan would build twelve (with several asterisks beside that number...)

Poem of the Month

Her

(Written April 24, 1997)

*She is there still
In my heart
In my mind
Thoughts of her
Her sweet long hair
Her delicate waist
Those eyes of azure
That smile, that laugh*

*Her, dreams of her, in my mind
Her beauty, her being
In my mind, then and now
Thoughts that won't disappear
Thoughts of that person, that warmth, that aura
Of her, of her long, skinny frame
Her red ride, her flair, her fancies
These thoughts, are still there
In my heart, in my mind*

*When will these thoughts end?
When will I, again, have life?*

Drake Turn Eleven

GM: Michael Lowrey 6503-D Fourwinds Drive Charlotte NC 28212 (704) 563-9226

Deadline: Turn Twelve orders are due August 20.

David Hood	Hickory Instellar Colonial Kingpins (HICK)
Keith Oschman	Galactic Unicorn
Vince Lutterbie	Vince's Winches
David Partridge	Barsoom Project
Pat Conlon	Spacehog

1. HICK opens the bidding on the Outpost. He is also the sole bidder (Mi16, Ti 11, Ti8, Ti7, Wa9, Wa7, Wa7, Wa6, Or5, Or2, Or1, Or1, 20 discount). HICK also transfers a man from ore to the freebie Titanium factory.
2. The Barsoom Project gets the Ecoplant upgrade for face value (Ti12, Ti12, Wa6). He takes advantage of this to buy two population factors cheap (Ti12) and man his ore plants.
3. Spacehog purchases a titanium factory (Ti9, Wa8, Wa6, Wa4, Or3) and transfers population from ore production to crew it.
4. Vince's Winches bids 50 on Robots and get them (Wa9, Wa9, Wa8, Wa8, Wa7, Or 5, Or4).
5. Galatic Unicorn buys a Water Factory (Wa8, Wa7, Wa5) and a population unit (Wa7, Or3) to man it.

Dispatches From the Front

Arleigh Burke

Austria-World: I will let anyone order my remaining units for one turn if that person can show me a letter he received from Melinda Holley (written for this game).

Austria-England: Is a slew of standby positions one of the overlooked additional duties of a new pubber?

MPL-Austria: But at least it is a good standby position!

Austria-England: Who are you imitating: Holley or Guth?

Austria-Turkey: Dear Santa Claus, all I want for Christmas is a trip to Copenhagen. They make excellent lagers there.

Italy-Turkey: Why should I write press when you do it for me? England shouldn't have read what you wrote for me in last issue's press. Frown

Italy-GM: I didn't write any press for last issue!!!

GM-Italy: My apologies. Some Austrian press was written with a Rome label. Under CCC house rules, which allows grey but not black press, I should have reheaded them as Austrian.

Eduard Shevardadze:

Turkey-England: What's with the rush to crush the sultan? Don't blush! Just hush! (Before you feel the back end of the harem's brush) Grin

Turkey-Russia: When the going gets tough, the tough get going!

Berlin-Paris: Nothing like discovering that the Kick Me sign on your back was written by your own hand.

France-England: Steve do you watch the Drew Carey Show?! Bite me dough boy!

France-Germany: Two words for you. Vichy France.

London-Berlin: Please be nice to me!

England-Russia: I envy yours as well. As a songwriter once said, "When you got nothin', you got nothin' to lose." Actually I wouldn't mind taking the Italian position.

Seydlitz Turn 14/15

2:42 AM: With time (and ammunition) running short, both sides in this battle are making desperate moves to sink the enemy. On the Ajax, her senior surviving officer orders all guns to open fire on the Ariel, just 1,200 yards or so distant. For good measure, he'd probably order a torpedo fired too, but none are left. With that option gone, he orders the cruiser to try and run down the little (okay, 600 ton) Italian torpedo boat.

On the Ariel, the target of the moment is the Ajax. As might be expected, the Ajax gets the better of the action. Though taking a few minor hits, she places numerous six-inch shells in the Ariel. All guns are knocked out of action, while the already badly damaged hull takes more abuse as ready use ammunition starts to explode. The Ariel's valiant crew, meanwhile heads for the lifeboats as she is reduced to a floating wreck. Oh, and the Ajax didn't manage to ram her smaller opponent.

The remainder of the Italian force, under somewhat confused command (something about the orders submitted being the same as for the previous turn...), both destroyers opt to simply sail straight or generally toward the enemy. This, combined with a turn toward the enemy (or at least the Camicia Nera, the nearest enemy ship) allows the Ajax to cross the Camicia Nera from the rear and the hard-charging Artigliere from the front.

Orders for the final turn (turn fifteen gunnery, turn sixteen movement, and turn sixteen gunnery) are due August 20. Players: Teresa Armstrong is commanding the Ajax while Keith Oschman is the Italian commander.

Another long-running Diplomacy zine has folded. Citing a lack of interest in the games it was running, John Boardman has ceased publication of Empire after 417 issues. He does continue to put out the even longer running Graustark, which features an opening in Diplomacy. Earlier this year, Herb Barents folded Boast after some 414 issues; he could not find players to continue to fill games. It is not a good sign when publications are folding because they can no longer generate enough interest and support in a declining hobby to justify continued publication.

Here is a question for you. How many German submarines were captured by the US in WWI. I have a German U-boat commander's leather pea jacket and the guy who gave it to me said it was taken from the commander of the only German U-boat captured by the US in WWI. Comments?

»Well, at best the guy's story is at least half wrong. Both V.E. Tarrant's The U-Boat Offensive 1914-1945 and Conway's state that no German submarines were captured during World War I. Two were sunk and raised to enter service with the Allies during the war; the United States was not involved in either case. In fact, the U.S. played only a minor part in the war at sea during WWI; the British did the heavy lifting.

What I think he is referring to is the sinking of the U-58. On November 17, 1917, the large German submarine U-58 was engaged and sunk by the American destroyer Fanning off Milford Haven. The U-Boat was heavily damaged by depth charges; however, she did manage to surface and all but one of her crew were rescued. So it is possible that the jacket could have come from G. Amberger, the U-58's commander. The incident is quite well report in works on the American naval involvement in the Great War; this was the only undisputed case of an American ship sinking a U-Boat. If it really is Amberger's jacket, it is worth a great deal. Authenticating that is almost impossible though. There are any number of other ways someone could come into possession of such a jacket.

Well I lie! I have been a lot busy. There were assignments to attend to, and an exam to study for. I just sat on Tuesday, July 1, and feel like I did OK. I'll just have to wait for the results though to make sure. On top of all that, of course, is a whole barrow full of cow patties in relation to work, and training courses and all that stuff. But that is all incidental. I have a week off, so it is time to catch up with a few games before the next box of correspondence materials arrives for semester 2.

What do you mean you are not fit and well? You should be taking care of yourself you know, otherwise you'll end up in a long care facility looked after by a half trained bunch of well-meaning incompetents. Believe me, I've seen it. Nothing is more important than keeping your health together, so get to it and do what you have to do. That's official!

»I've had a cough since last September. Two months ago, I had a broncoscopy to determine the cause. (They put you under and stick a probe into your lungs to see what everything looks like and to get samples.) Previous tests had ruled out asthma and two different types of antibiotics hadn't helped. The results show nothing too serious. I apparently have something called aspiration; stomach contents are coming up into my lungs as I sleep, which might cause the coughing. I also have elevated lymphocyte counts in my lung tissue, which could come from either a viral or environmental cause. Small amounts of silica were found in my lungs; my doctor assumes that exposure to chalk dust is causing this. So, for now, the solution is just to not eat three hours or less before I go to bed (you try it...), sleep with the head of my bed raised six inches, and avoid using chalk when I teach. Oh, and I'm still coughing as badly as ever, especially when I take a walk or am otherwise physically active.
