all underlined deals fall, no retreats, Gre and Swe are still open.
 I hope Tom doesn't miss again. If he does, Bernie will take over Austria.
 His address is on the original, official address sheet under OZOG II. No press (ho hum) except from our standby:

(BRACKLEY PRESS) Suddenly, there appeared 69 angels, perched on the head of a pin. On the other side of their world, the square root of 69, which is ---eight something--- in number, were devils clothed in their formal black attire. Each of those angels, the devine ones as well as the ø 'fallen' ones, were grasping as it were at straws, each trying to reach the center of the pin in order to get that magnificent blade, gracefully balanced there, the blade that promised to cut the ~~blade~~ grain of mother nature herself, a blade trained and cultured, I understand, in the slums of Philadelphia, a state of confusion by some standards. Those devine angels, dressed in the Violet Ray, could not understand how those angels could be clothed in white, yet be so black at heart.

I would like the opinions of all the players in both games, on the nature of standbys. It is my personal opinion that it would be better to use immediate standby moves, by a designated standby, then let the units of a country just sit there. (Especially in 1901.) The standby would send orders for all seven nations. (Such as Bernie Oaklyn in OZOG I.)

If all the players, or a majority of, vote in favor of this, I would like another standby for game two.

Suppose there were two NMR's? Well, then I would call one of the local players in the Chicago area, and have them give me stanby moves over the phone. Of course, one standby wouldn't submit orders for two countries in the same game. Different standbys for different countries. Vote on this with your next set of moves. Everybody vote!

No retreats, Gre, Bel, and Den are still neutral. No instant standby was available for Germany, so Don will assign one right below:

Richard Nielsen, 653 Goulwood Dr., Charlotte, N.C. 28214.

(LONDON) Informed sources in Parliament today advised that the 1st High-landers have beached in Norway being supported by His Majesty's 1st and 2nd fleets. This option was agreed upon since, choosing not to move into the Barents Sea and not to move against either Holland nor Denmark neither Germany nor Russia have been threatened. The Highlanders (their high) in Norway are in a position to guard against any Russian advances (not while they're high) and maintenance of the fleet in the North Sea will also guard against German aggression. (Hah! he's asleep) Talks are continuing with both countries to demilitarize Scandinavia however the British Empire will remain in a state of readiness in the event that a permanent settlement is not desired by other parties. There was also much talk about the Sultan's attempt to mount the Turkish fleet on wagons and tow it to Smyrna. It was an elaborate but futile attempt.

(LIVONIA) Tattering on the end of a quarter inch wire rope, the official accountant of this proud province set to the task of placing a needle, just about 1 1/3" long, and skinny as Aunt Mable, in position at the focal point of the long telescope usually used to view quasars in extra galactic space. Once the needle was placed, the entire unit was quickly placed aboard a large sea-going cork, and floated to Sweden, where in the atmosphere of cool, unpolluted snow storms, the accountant would begin his task of first counting the angels perched on the tip of that needle and then, the impossible task of weighing each angel. When asked why it was he got that job, he ran away, yelling at the top of his voice,

"That's what you get when you spy for the devil!"
