Well, this issue is going to be short and sweet for some, sour for others. As most of you probably know by now Skylab has been acting up again and I have been working 14-16 hour days for the past two weeks. This type of schedule will probably continue for at least another week. The only reason I am able to type this thing up now is that I convinced the NASA brass that my brains were being scrambled by the long hours for so long a time and I had to have some reprieve. My compassionate plea really brought tears to their eyes so for three days I am only working 12 hours a day.

At long last our final game has been filled. I had seven players three weeks ago but one of them has been erratic of late as a player and from what he told me about his future schedule I did not feel the situation would improve. So I have replaced him with one I would consider as a more reliable player.
