Some of you still seem confused by my hours at work and at home and many don't know the sub price of EE. EE costs $6.00 for 10 issues, the same price it has always been since 1981. I am off on Fridays and Saturday. Every other day, I leave here around 2:30 PM(Central Time) for work and return close to midnight each night. While I am away from home, I leave the phone off the hook. There was a burglar gang here who would see homes with no cars in the driveway. would get the name off the mailbox, go home, call the telephone number of the car-less home and drive back to the house. If the phone was still ringing when they got back, they would assume no one was in the house, break in and rob. I don't want that happening to me. When I am at home, the phone is on the hook.

§ Jim Finley came through Memphis recently leaving California for Marine Officer School in Virginia and stayed two days. I always enjoy meeting friends I've never seen face-to-face. I'm only sorry Jim wasn't here long enough to make me some of his real, authenic Mexican-style chili!

§ Next issue, I hope to have an address list of the subbers. But this issue, you have some other things. Like the wrap-up for Windsor/Saxe-Coburg-Gotha 1981 AN which begins on page 12. This was EE's longest game and went all the way to 1916. You can follow it via its headlines and cartoon captions for the entire 16 years! "Rhino" 1982 U was also supposed to be wrapped up this issue but I'm having to hold it over so you Phino players who haven't sent in an endgame statement have until around July 15 or so to send one in.

Fox" on page 32: Of her, Thomas Franke of West Germany writes: "I like the "Europa Sexpress kitten of the month", no matter what John Pack says. Please, continue to run this column!" Well, Thomas that is in the hands of Savonlinna's editor, Mike Mills who, surprisingly, was not considered sexist enough to win the Dave Carter Award for most sexist hobby member. Who did win? See page 11!

I recently had some trouble with my contact lenses and had to wear my glasses for a week, something I've not done since high school. When I take my contacts out, I sit on the floor with my legs crossed and head bent over to "pop" the contact out (At Minn-Con, some did not know what I was doing and asked if this position was "Tennessee Yoga"!) but the right one would not come out and was really hurting the eye. I had to drive halfway across town with one eye shut tight and have my contact doctor take it out. But now I'm wearing them again.

This is the first time since EE #12, which came out in March, 1982, over 3 years ago, that one of Pat Hart's Dipscriptions has not appeared on page 2. After 3 years, Pat tells me that's he packing it in, at least for awhile. The Dipscriptions, and that word was coined by Pat, were brief character capsule comments about hobby members based on what Pat read about you here in EE or in the many other zines that he received. Pat's a good writer who will be missed. Thanks for 3 wonderful years of Dipscriptions, Pat. Pat is from South Carolina.

What good is a blood donor?

THEY'RE GOOD FOR: People who go through windshields and red lights Someone with cancer, hemophilia, anemia, hepatitis or ulcers People into feudin' and fightin' A little girl who doesn't know why leukemia has happened to her A little boy who needs revving up People having open-heart surgery People needing a new organ—a new heart, liver, lung, or kidney (a part as well as a pint) New babies or new mothers needing new life Little kids-getting into poison or falling onto something share People fooling around with explosives or guns People burned pretty bad Daredevils or tree climbers People in the wrong place at the wrong time SOMEBODY OUT THERE NEEDS A LITTLE OF YOU A LOT - YOU ARE SOMEBODY'S HERO.

If you've never given blood before, I'd like you to consider it. The last time I gave, the donor card(at left on this page) had changed and I was really impressed at how about 10 minutes of my time could possibly help in so many ways.

And donating blood is a great gift you can give your family, your friends, your church, your place of employment. By making at least one or two donations per year, you can cover all the blood needs(in case of operation etc.) for your loved ones. Otherwise, if you are not covered, the need for blood transfusion could be quite expensive.

Giving blood does not hurt and you get orange juice and cookies at the end of it. In the USA, you can give every 8 weeks or as much as 5 times a year, so you could cover both your church and your job for example or your parents or a club you belong to.

Luc Dodinval of Belgium writes: "Good, you're a blood-giver! So am I. I'm also 0 +.

Are there many blood-givers in the USA? How often are you allowed to give blood?

Here, in Belgium, it's every three months, no less."

In the USA, there is always blood shortages and those who do give are called to come back as soon as they have been out for 8 weeks. It seems this shortage is nation-wide so your community, friends and family need YOU! Be a good citizen and donate your blood. If I can donate blood and wear contacts and send Fresident Reagan a telegram(see page 22), anyone can! So call today. There is sure to be a blood bank near you. By the way, Luc and I are both 0+, which is known as the "universal donor"--our blood can go to anyone. About 1/3 of the population is 0+.............Now for my con report from......Minn-Con at the home of Scott Hanson and Frauke Petersen.....

Minneapolis

"HELLO MINNESOTA!!"

--by Gary L. Coughlan

(I just wonder how many of the people who went to Minneapolis and who will be writing reports, will use this title?!) On Memorial Day Weekend, May 24-27, Minn-Con was held in the Minneapolis home of Scott Hanson and Franke Petersen with honorable mention for Beth Beaty on the second floor.

13 people from 4 US states and 3(!) Canadian provinces came to the con and possible con reports can be read by some of them in the publications that follow the K names: Beth Beaty, Matthew Chen, Karen Christianson, Gary Coughlan (EE), Jerry Falkiner, Scott Hanson(Big Hits of Mid-America), Nancy Hurrell, Bruce McIntyre(Excelsior), Debi Peters(Debi's Filler), Marc Peters(So I Lied), Frauke Petersen(Big Hits of Mid-America), Jeff Richmond (Frobozz) and "Cave". I didn't catch Cave's whole name but the fact that he and Beth gave up seeing Psycho and Marnie to hang around Minn-Con deserves a mention.

I was really impressed that the con was almost equally divided between men and women (8 men, 5 women) and that 3 Canadians attended, all from different provinces which were Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia. The US states were Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan and Tennessee. To make Minn-Con, people traveled by airplane, car, train and bus.

After heavy negotiations with the EE printer, I got EE #44 back at 10:30 AM on Friday, May 24 and had to catch the plane for Minneapolis at 12:30 PM, a bare two hours later, so none were mailed from Minnesota but had to wait til I got back.

Scott, Franke and Jeff Richmond met me at the airport and we headed for their home. Along the expressway (Autobahn), the homes had wooden fences behind them, unlike Memphis which has wire fences. Scott and Frauke said that the wood helps keep out the noises from the expressway of the cars and trucks. That's smart and sounds Scandinavian. Many Minnesotans are descended from the Scandinavian countries and Germany and, as we would find out, most European beers are available there.

The site for Minn-Con was a two-story 1940s-style home surrounded by a yard with no grass! It had been dug up for re-planting and Scott and Frauke had a garden. ((Minn-Con continues on page 牛

The sprinkler system was going full-blast and by the time the con ended Scott and Franke had grass.

Scott and Frauke lived in the bottom floor while the upper floor belonged to Beth Beaty. Beth and Scott went to high school together and she made a real good chili for all of us(with kidney beans, Jim Finley!). Three cats had the run of the house(and believe me they used it) and were named Misha, Bruce and Mausi. There would be lots of jokes about Eruce as no one could be clear whether you were talking about Bruce the cat or Bruce McIntyre. Mausi was the inspiration for the home-brewed beer that Scott and Frauke make called "Mausi Bier". Last year(May, 1984) at Mad Con, Scott and Frauke had just begun brewing this beer and it really tasted bad. But a year's experience has really improved it. I drank some for my birthday and also let Jim Finley, who came through Memphis, "imbibe".

Our hosts had filled the refrigerator with several kinds of beer. Scott said he was imitating the successful Mad Con philosophy: plenty of beer and no plans. The next was to arrive was Matthew Chen from upper state Minnesota and then Jerry Falkiner who drove for 20 hours, right after work from Ontario, Canada.

This first day we mostly sat around and talked, looked at pictures, heard about Scott and Franke's recent trip to Europe and played a game called Barricade, a German game which reminded me of "Aggravation". I also discovered the popsicle lady but she didn't have dream-sicles so I settled for push-ups, which is of orange sherbert and good on a warm day.

Bruce McIntyre and Nancy Hurrell (Crossing an entire continent this British Columbia boy and this Quebec girl would meet in romantic Winnipeg, hop a bus with a 9-hour layover in Fargo, North Dakota, just to go to Minn-Con) were to arrive by bus but no one knew when so Scott called the bus station and found out it would 6:30 AM Saturday morning and that was the only bus so they were sure to be on it.

I got to sleep this Friday night on a bed-roll beneath 3 large windows, sort of like the bay windows on the Mary Tyler Moore Show. (Both the home used for that TV series and the home for singer Prince, His Purple Badness, are in the twin cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul).

Early the next morning, I was rudely awakened by the mad dashing of feet across my body. WHOOSH followed by WHEESH followed by WHOOSH and I gained a closer acquaintance with felines Mausi and Bruce who were hissing at a big yellow cat outside. The night before, Scott told me that this prime sleeping location would be for Marc and Debi Peters when they arrived. They were welcome to it.

Bruce and Nancy called they waited 30 mimutes, having breakfast, before calling so early) and Scott and Frauke fetched them. Everybody gradually woke up and we enjoyed watching Saturday morning cartoons, something I hadn't done since I was real young. Bruce and Nancy had had some experiences on their way.

For starters, Nancy had traveled on a train for 41 hours from Montreal to Winnipeg to meet Bruce who was flying in from Vancouver. Not only had he nearly lost his airline ticket(throwing Nancy into a panic) but he had forgotten her birthday and even failed to recognize her at the Winnipeg airport. In fairness to Bruce, Nancy had cut her hair and he had not seen her for over a year I believe.

Nancy speaks French as well as she does English and when she told me her name(Hurrell), I thought it was "Irwin" and thought we have another Nancy Irwin in the hobby. And you know, Canadians really do say "eh" alot as in: "I went to the store, eh? And I bought some milk, eh?" This "eh" characteristic has been lampooned in the very funny comedy series, SC-TV. Nancy said that when a Canadian says "eh" to you, to just say "B", "C", "D" and so on. Jerry said that the Canadian way to spell "Canada" is "C - eht- N - eht- D - eh"!

We played the German game Hase und Igel(Hare and Hedgehog) where you are a rabbit who tries to eat 3 lettuces and get rid of your carrots in a timely manner, before you reach the last pasture. ((continued on page 5))

And on this Saturday, I found out how ignorant I am due to working nights. Am I the only person who thought you could get a hamburger at McDonald's before 10:30 AM in the morning? I knew that they offered breakfast up until that time, but I also thought that you could get hamburgers anytime McDonald's was open. This is not so. Franke is the manager at a McDonald's so I had to wait until later in the day. I am not usually a breakfast person.

am not usually a breakfast person.

We then played one of the 2 Diplomacy games played. This one was gunboat where you just write your orders and cannot negotiate. (That way there are no lies on your conscience). I was Germany and had a see-saw battle with Matthew Chen's France and, on the far horizon, a steadily encroaching Russia led by Bruce McIntyre. Scott's Italy and Jeff Richmond's Austria kept maneuvering near Munich and I abandoned it a couple of times but no one ever moved in. My big break came when Bruce fell asleep, something he did in March at LepreCon. At this point there was no one who could take his place and I was able to grab Sweden. Norway, Warsaw and St. Petersburg.

could take his place and I was able to grab Sweden, Norway, Warsaw and St. Petersburg. I kept praying that Bruce wouldn't wake up (Really, he always goes to sleep in his face-to-face Diplomacy games around 1905 or so!) because any Russia could have stopped me. Scott didn't help matters any by saying: "Marc Peters should arrive any time now and he can take over Russia." I silently prayed and my prayers were answered; Bruce slept on and Marc didn't arrive in time.

The last arrivals were Marc Peters, his wife Debi and their friend Karen Christianson from Madison, Wisconsin. They passed out their zine So I Lied and we played other games like a card game "I Doubt It". Debi had injured her foot when she had jammed it on a telephone receiver after watering Dale Bakken, along with her plants, with a water spout. Don't ask, just go to their Mad-Con(see page 11) and know that you will meet some very interesting people!

The popsicle lady came by again but, this day, there was no real relief from the heat. The house was like a furnace and there was no wind at all. Fortunately, every other day was comfortable. That Saturday night it rained hard and there were hail-stones. We played the only other game of Dip that night and it was negotiation. Earlier in the day, we had visited this liquor store and they had beer from many countries. I bought a keg of DAB, the beer that Thomas Franke and Jutta Hoffman had introduced me to in Dortmund, Germany. Deutsche Bier Nummer Eins!

Saturday night, I moved into the den-office off the living room but still on the first floor. I had only brought a pillow and a sheet and the floor was very hard. Plus the cats followed me and Marc and Debi got a peaceful night's sleep.

At this point, I got up. Several had gone out to breakfast and everyone else was still asleep except for Scott and me. The cats started hissing; it was that yellow cat again. Scott shut the door and then went into the bathroom to take a shower which left me in the kitchen and the cats in the doorway to the living room. Suddenly they started hissing at each other and growling and their fur ruffled and I began calling Scott and considering my options: Try to outrun the imminent fight that appeared to be coming or flee by opening the door to the outside where the yellow cat was. Scott came in and separated the cats, very carefully, and said he had never seen them like this ("What's this? You guys live together. Stop this.") They calmed down then.

The next game was Trivial Pursuit and we divided into teams of 3 each. First up was Scott Hanson, Marc and Nancy. Before they missed a question ("What 1953 movie revived Frank Sinatra's career?"), they had won 5 of 6 "wedges" and the Sinatra question was for their 6th wedge. Beware these people at TF:

Card games dominated this day. If you were into bridge or hearts, you should have gone to Minn-Con. While this was going on, 5 of us drove to nearby Wisconsin to buy some more beer before the Monday holiday(No beer is sold in Minnesota on Sundays and Wisconsin does a thriving Minnesotan trade then).

After this we went to White Castle's, a hamburger place I had always heard of but had never eaten at. The hamburgers are tiny and come in little cardboard boxes. This is quite similar-sounding to a hamburger chain in the South called Krystal's. Karen Christianson calls the Whiteyburgers "sliders" because they slide right on through your body's digestive tract....

This night we listened to a Monty Python tape Bruce had brought. I remember particularly enjoying "We Like Chinese" off of it. Things really got rowdy after this. I got to prove that I knew the words to Secret Agent Man when we watched that TV show. Someone put Mausi in a sack and brought him to me to discipline with a drum-stick. We watched Monty Python on TV and then Bonanza.

Bonanza was fun because it was an early one that still had the eldest son Adam on it and because Ben Cartwright got engaged. We all spectulated on how violent his fiancee's death would be because Ben couldn't marry every guest star who appeared on Bonanza. (She lived, but had to go away to take care of her criminal son, certainly not a fit step-brother for Hoss and Little Joe!).

Frauke told us a German tongue-twister ("Fischer Fritz fischt frische Fische. Frische Fische fischt Fischer Fritz.") and I showed her some "elephant jokes" which had appeared in the Irish zine Goolnacran pubbed by Nicholas Whyte. ("Warum tragen Elefanten rote Stiefel?"--Um unbemerkt durch die Erdbeerefeldern zu gehen.....
"Warum tragen Elefanten blaue Stiefel?" --Weil die Roten schmutzig werden..."Warum versammeln sich Elefanten in Zwölfergruppen?" --Stiefel sind dutzendweise billiger.)

Also on the TV this night was a local Minneapolis commercial advertisement for cars. It appeared several times and always began "HELLO MINNESOTA!" It cracked us all up. I don't anything on TV is quite as bad as local commercials.

Then everyone went to sleep except for Karen, Scott and me. We watched the 3 Stooges and each of us kept a running account of how many acts of violence were committed during that brief episode. It ranged from 71 down to 65 acts of violence! I had pleaded for a cat-free sanctuary and Beth found me an air mattress up stairs. I think it was Jeff's who had moved up to couch status. He and Jerry had slept upstairs every night. I carefully shut the doors and escaped the cats!

Until the next morning, when Bruce McIntyre opened the doors and deliberately sized the cats on me. I felt like the cartoon chicken, Leghorn Foghorn, who'd say: "I say, son, you bother me." Then everyone got up and we went to a Shoney's-Denny's Mid West equivalent for breakfast before dropping Bruce and Nancy off for their bus trip back to Canada at 11:30 AM.

But, someone had read(read Bruce) the bus schedule wrong and the bus had already left(the only bus to Winnipeg remember!) at 11:15. This was particularly bad because Bruce and Nancy had airline tickets at Winnipeg and they had to get there. Frauke got the bus dispatcher to agree to hold the bus for an extra 10 minutes in St. Cloud, Minnesota while Scott drove Nancy and Bruce to that town. They made it!

The rest of us went back to Scott and Frauke's and the games for Monday were a card game called Rummy-O, Rubic's Cube and a fun game called Survive! In Survive! you must get your people off a big central island which is slowly sinking into the sea and heading for a volcano eruption. You must flee to any of the 4 islands at the edge of the board by either swimming or taking a boat. The perils include whales (who sink the boats), sharks (who eat the people), sea serpents (who do both) and the other players (who want to have the most people survive and thus win). I enjoyed this game the best of all.

By Monday afternoon everyone but me had left. My plane would fly out on Tuesday morning. Scott and Frauke rented the movie Dressed To Kill starring Angie Dickinson, Amy Irving and Michael Caine and then we went to sleep early, all tuckered out. I finally moved up to couch status.

Tuesday, I flew back to Memphis and the waiting EEs. I had really enjoyed myself, meeting several new people and renewing old friendships. I finally got to see where Scott and Frauke live and I added a new state to my list(I've now been to 29 of the 50 states). Scott said the number who attended was just right, not too many to be crowded, and not too few so that any number of games could not be played. Minn-Con reminded me of a smaller version of Mad-Con and that is the highest tribute I can give. I know everyone agrees that Scott and Frauke were great hosts. There's a lot to be said for "plenty of beer and no plans."

[THE BOOB REALLY LEAVES PROVIDENCE FOR THE PROMISED LAND]-(Via Germany): If not the plane, why not try the train? The Boob ambles over toward the Amtrak station.

He crosses a construction area, trips over a rake, falls headlong into a wheel-barrow, rolls a few feet, tips over, rolls down a hill, grabs a rope on a pulley, tries to pull himself up, rope gives way, not being attached to anything, momentum flips him back, over a precipice, lands in a pile of briny mid, surrounded by corregated cast iron walls, scrambles up the wall, vaults over the top, splash right into the Woonasquatucket(that's a tidal river). The Boob scrambles out and splutters his way into the adjoining train station.

A shadowy echo meets the Boob...the waiting room is stipped bare...the ticket window is silent, the tracks are...gone!

Our Boob is heartbroken. He collapses in a flood of tears, bemoaning the gross unfairness of it all. What had taken away the Boob's beloved train? How will the Boob get to Memphis? Will the Boob die of some dread disease picked up in the foul-smelling river? Most importantly, will the Boob ever realize his dream of jigglelating Elsie's luhtisibles? For the answers to these and other obnoxious onerous questions, tune in next month!

Memphis to the Boob: Why come to Memphis when you can actually see, in person, the Von Bulow trail in Providence?!! Now, like a....Virgin....

[TALES OF THE VIRGIN]—(Via Turkey): In the back of a truck on Star Route 15: The virgin's dreams of being caught in an avalanche and the reality of the truck's motion merged as she woke up. Her disorientation frightened her. She reached about feeling the canvas sacks upon which she lay. She couldn't see anything, only feel the motion of the mound upon which she lay. She reached up and felt the smooth, cold surface of the top of the truck.

The truck was decelerating as it left the freeway. The downward slope of the offramp caused the virgin to fall forward onto her face. Caught by surprise, she was unable to break the fall with her hands and she scraped her face on a metal lock attached to one of the bags. She touched her fingers to where it hurt and then touched them to her lips tasting blood.

The truck was turning and slowing down. She remembered where she was and began to realize that the truck was coming to its destination, probably another post office. She frant-ically began trying to figure out how to get out of the truck without trouble. She was still without a plan when the truck stopped and began backing up.

The virgin squirmed down as far back in the truck as she could as the truck bumped into something and stopped. She heard the driver's door slam and stiffened in anticipation of the back door opening. She waited. Nothing. She waited. She started thinking of the swim she had had earlier in the day. What she wouldn't give to be back in the river again. The dusty bags, the pummeling ride, and the pain in her cheek brought her to new levels of distress.

She was startled by the bang of the latch on the door and blinded by the opening of the door. The bright light was coming from spot lights being shined into the truck. It was dark beyond the light. She heard voices and the sound of bags being thrown. Soon all she heard was the steady rhythm of someone unloading the truck. The light being shown in the truck was bright and she was afraid to pick her head

HOBBY-WIDE NEWS

§ NEW ZINE: Steve Knight has entered the ranks of publishers with It's a digest zine and will have a letter [column and offer 2 games of Diplomacy and the postal soccer game called United, so popular in Europe. Steve says he will run other games as well depending on what the subbers wish. Sub fees are 50¢ plus postage per issue. However, Steve offers 14 chances for you to qualify for free issues(for instance females and pubbers e all entitled to one free issue.) Write Steve Knight at:

and Europeans are all entitled to one free issue.) Write Steve Knight at: 11905 Winterthur Ln. #103, Reston, Virginia 22091 USA.

- § Bill Becker will be starting another game of United(postal soccer) with the August 24, 1985 issue of his K-Zine. The game will be run on 4-week deailines and $6.00 covers the game and sub fee for 12 issues. Write Bill, who says rules for United can be had for the asking(but send a stamp!) at: 810 Turwill, Kalamazoo, Michigan 49007 USA.
- § Everything, the zine of the BNC where gamestarts and ends are recorded, has found a new printer in Dave Kleiman, pubber of The Diplomat, and issue #64 has just come out with some new features. Bill Quinn, the ENC, is establishing a "Universal Standby List" for use by the Orphan Games Service and for publishers who have no standbys left in their pool. Another feature is called "Litigation" where the BNC decisions on game irregularities and complaints are presented publicly. Issue #64 dealt with the subjects of anonymous standbys and a case of possible GM misconduct. I don't see the sub rates listed but send a couple of dollars to Bill Quinn and that should be for several issues. Bill's address is: 301 Conroe Drive, Conroe, Texas 77301 USA.
- § With Steve Hutton's trip to Europe, his zine No Fixed Address, and its totally open letter column which was forcing the feuders to either put up or shut up, is not being published until August or September. In the meantime, Steve Langley, pubber of Magus, has said that he feels "that the void could best be filled with a zine that prints exactly what is sent it." So Steve will be doing a "letterzine" called The Not For Hire which will go for 75¢ an issue. Steve says that if you mention someone in your letter to include their address so they can be sent copies of what is said about them. To get TNFH (the first issue is due out in late June), write Steve at: 2296 Eden Roc Lane #1, Sacramento, California 95825 USA.
- § Bahnhof Zoo (see page 35) is the first subzine to be printed in 3 different zines in 3 different countries. BZ is now printed in America's EE, West Germany's Sauri Allstar Unlimited and Belgium's Mach Die Spuhl. And now, BZ's publishers, husband and wife team Scott Hanson and Franke Petersen, will be beginning their own zine called Pommes Mit Mayo, which will carry an international letter column. For more details see pages 37 and 35.
- § 1985's Dave Carter Award for most sexist(not sexiest!) hobby member was announced by Judy Winsome in her Winsome Losesome #32. Brian Creese, British editor of the recently folded NMR!, is this year's winner nominated by Ben Schilling, specifically for the "rather sexist type of cover" of NMR #48. This the 3rd time the award has been given. The first two winners were from America and Canada. Is continental Europe next? Are those guys sexist?!
- § Watch Your Back in Great Britain has folded, its publisher John Wilman announced. It had reached issue #74 and will be missed.

Like all original EE games, 1981 AN's game name derived from World War I, the scenario on which our Diplomacy game is based. Unlike the other EE games, this game actually changed its game name every 3 game years to simulate an actual event during the real World War I.

The European royal families at the time of World War I were closely related. The King of England was first cousin to the Kaiser of Germany and to both the Isar and Tsarina of Russia for instance. Most of the royal families had German blood although they identified strongly with their own nations.

During the war, the Germans were successfully portrayed as beasts and Huns and baby killers. In many of the allied countries, a wave of anti-German hysteria set in. The music of Beethoven and Bach was banned: German musicians. In the USA, sauerkraut became known as "Liberty Cabbage". Hard as it may be to believe, but the German language was once more popular in American schools than French or Spanish, but it was cast out, never to regain its prestige.

The British Royal Family's name was Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, which had been Queen Victoria's dynasty as well. To the average Briton, this name was German and remember that by this time the Tsar(1917) had been overthrown in Russia. Thrones in Europe were shakey. H.G. Wells, British author, said that the Royal Family in England was "an alien and uninspiring court." King George V of England replied: "I may be uninspiring but I'm damned if I'm alien." Nevertheless, he decided to change his dynasty's name to a more English-sounding one. They finally settled on the name "Windsor". The Kaiser is said to have laughed at this and jokingly said that Shakespeare's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" should now be "The Merry Wives of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha" in Germany. ((Continued on page 13))

King George also asked that all other royalty in England change their German-sounding names to English-sounding ones. The Battenbergs, after toying with the new name of "Battenhill", decided on "Mountbatten". Prince Phillip is descended from this family and his uncle was the famous Lord Mountbatten in World War II. Today the British Royals from Prince Charles on down bear the name of "Windsor-Mountbatten".

It took 3 years of war before the British Royal Family changed their name. And to commenorate that event, 1981 AN changed every 3 game years from Windsor to Saxe-Coburg-Gotha and back again. (For easy listing, I'll call it "Windsor").

EE began with 3 original games in March, 1981. The other two games ended about 2 years ago and both of them had been delayed by a Canadian mail strike for several months. In contrast, there were no Canadians in Windsor, and this game ended 2 years after the other two did. And Windsor was a game of firsts...

When the Canadian mail strike hit, it came during the Winter 1901 season for

When the Canadian mail strike hit, it came during the Winter 1901 season for Windsor which left me with a big blank space. So Windsor became the first of the EE games to have a cartoon, something that expanded to all EE games afterwards. It had the first Malmberger ever called. It was by far, the longest game played in EE—the next season would have been Spring 1917. It was the first EE game with players from three continents (North America, Europe and Asia). It is the only game who had a season GMed by another GM besides myself (Steve Arnawoodian GMed Windsor in Spring 1914). Each of the 7 players had address changes during the game and orders were sent to me from Mexico, West Germany and Saudi Arabia during the game at various points. In fact, two players, Mark "Faz" Fassic and Al Pearson were in Saudi Arabia, but at different times.

Despite the game's length, 6 of the original 7 players played their countries to the end and this is excellent considering the game went to Fall 1916! During the entire 4 years of play, only 6 Malmbergers needed to be called. Thanks to Peter Ansoff, Mike Barno, Al Giddings, Rick Holman, Mark Larzelere and James Wall for being the Windsor Malmbergers. Malc Smith was the only Malmberger to ever get into Windsor and he was the first Malmberger.

Now to the game proper: I am not much of an analyst and my view of this game (and any others) is revealed through the headlines and the cartoon captions. No one(at this typing) from the East has sent in an endgame statement so I can make mention of some things that I was told during the course of the game to cast additional light on things.

The West seemed to be in a muddle of which which 2 would go on which I power. Soon it appeared that a triple was forming and England hit Russia. Russia proceeded to move south and take over Turkey whose units became wild cards. Austria and Italy had an alliance which allowed the Italians to move into Serbia but Austria quite soon got nervous at Italy and attacked him. Germany meanwhile attacked England and seemed partial to continually shifting alliances among the powers and denounced, in the press, stick-to-the-bitter-end alliances. Germany excluded himself from any draw and clearly held the balance of power in Europe.

Austria continued to mop up in the east with little or no opposition although Russia constantly alerted the west to the "Red Menace". I think that Austria could have won this game had he not NMRed in the critical season of Fall 1909 in September, 1983. At that point, Austria seemed unstoppable and the West was inclined to acquiese in what seemed to be the inevitable. Based on the moves made by the others in Fall 1909, Austria could have captured 4 supply centers of Berlin, Sevastopol, Ankara and Marseille for a total of 17. The NMR rallied them to fight.

But the NMR kept Austria at 13 and it was not until 1912 that he reached 17 and he could never reach the magic number of 18 due to the unity of the other powers. Had any one of them(except for Italy at the end of the game as it turned out) bolted from the Allied front, Austria would have won. England was credited both by his allies and by Austria with being the guiding force behind the anti-Austrian alliance. The headlines tell the story.

The players in this game really contributed the press too and that often made it easy for me to compose the headlines. With so few NMRs, this game was a real pleasure to GM. Watch out for any of these guys in your games! They stick to the bitter end, come what may. At various times, the "top" language was Russian, French, German and from 1909 to 1916, game's end, Magyar for Austria. Al Pearson's Italy was down to one unit in 1904 but grew back to 4 units by 1909.

Of the 22 units which existed at the beginning of the war, only 7 survived ((continued on page 14)) to see the peace in 1916. Italy, Russia and Turkey were completed eliminated. 'England lost 2/3 of her original forces. Austria, France and Germany each lost 1/3 of their original units. Where was the final resting place for the original units by Fall 1916?

Austria: A Vienna was annihilated in Munich in Spring 1914, Army Budapest was in Apulia and Fleet Trieste was in the Tyrrhenian Sea. England: F Edinburgh was in Tunis, Fleet London was disbanded in the Norwegian Sea in Winter 1903 and Army Liverpool was disbanded in Belgium in Autumn 1905. France: Army Paris was in Marseille, Fleet Brest was disbanded in the Gulf of Lyon in Winter 1909 and Army Marseille was in Gascony. Germany: Army Berlin was in Finland, Army Munich was disbanded in Kiel in Winter 1908 and Fleet Kiel was in the Irish Sea.

Italy: Army Venice was annihilated in Serbia in Spring 1902, Army Rome was disbanded in Venice in Autumn 1903 and Fleet Naples was disbanded in Tunis in Winter 1915. Russia: Army Moscow was disbanded in Smyrna in Winter 1906, Army Warsaw was annihilated in Berlin in Fall 1911, Fleet St. Petersburg was disbanded in the Gulf of Bothnia in Winter 1902 and Fleet Sevastopol was disbanded in Ankara in Summer 1910. Turkey: Fleet Ankara was disbanded in the Aegean Sea in Winter 1904, Army Smyrna was annihilated in Ankara in Spring 1903 and Army Constantinople was disbanded in Warsaw in Autumn 1905.

Thanks to Mike Mills, the pubber of Savonlinna (see page 25), who provided me with flow charts so I could keep track of each unit!

ENDGAME STATEMENT FOR ENGLAND (Mark "Faz" Fassio) 1981 AN "Windsor/S-C-G"

Well, after 4 years and 40 days, what can one possibly say that hasn't already been said in one way, shape or form? When I joined up for this thing, I did not think that I would visit 2 continents, 2 U.S. coastlines, have 2 new assignments, or have a wife by the time it finished: Yet I rather enjoyed this game, even if it did resemble the "real trench life" after 1907 or so...

Originally(I hope my memory holds up here), Germany and I decided to hit France, end the west front quickly and then turn on Russia. But John's France] sharp playing and the natural French defensive positions cut short our blitzkrieg. I then tried (semi-successfully) to get a western 3-way going, to stop Austria, who was slowly making turkey out of Turkey(the old warrior Malc Smith, who played a good game). The result: we had a deal for awhile, then Jack Germany stabbed me when I was in Saudi Arabia. Ho, ho, ho, and Merry Christmas presents to you, too! Anyway, I won't go into a blow-by-blow of the entire 16 years of fighting. We all reunited when it became apparent that (a) I wouldn't die that easily, (b) Italy would help ag-ainst Austria, and (c) if we didn't team up, Kerry Austria would have the game handed to him. I think the simple fact that we stayed together for 8 years-3 disparate allies--(plus Al) was merit enough to share in the win!

Jack[Germany] seemed to lose interest in what was essentially a trench war after 1907 or so-I think in the last 6 "years" of playing, I got 1 or 2 letters and a couple of postcards from him. Perhaps my badgering about playing or ending his "existence" finally motivated him; I don't know. Suffice it to say that aftery years of badgering, he either eliminated himself from the running deliberately, out of protest at sharing a "heavy" 4-way draw, or else he just forgot to veto this last draw proposal--again, I don't know. But it's all history now.

Every person in this game was top-notch. Kerry Blant played an excellent Austria, and but for the luck of the Irish, he would've won the game in the middle years, when he was reaching 17. A shrewd player, and one who used his resources wisely.

Jack Fleming(at least the early years-Jack Fleming) [Germany] was sharp, responsive, and had a keen eye for the moves. The cooperation with me almost got France, and his stab of me almost got me. All around, he's a fine player, and both a worthy opponent and a good ally.

John Marsden France also played the game well—he rebounded from an early stab, then joined us when it became necessary to do so. I disagreed with his decision to knife Italy(as I disagreed with a few other things) but after all these years, it was great to have him as a team player. He always came up with the necessary supports/moves, and the game couldn't have been won without his help——it's that simple. Thanks, John.

--it's that simple. Thanks, John.

Al Pearson[Italy]--well, I had a soft spot for Honest Al this game. His defection to the West(some could call it "self-survival" gave us the anchor in our southern flank against Kerry[Austria], and also denied Austria his last few centers needed to win. I felt bad that everyone wanted Al out, because at that stage, a 5-player draw was as good as a 4-player one. But events proved differently, great-power politics came into play, and that was that. A 3-way was the last thing I expected, but I'm happy, considering that the alternative to 4 "real" years of playing would've been nameless obliteration.

The multi-player thing could've been different if things would've changed in, say 1906 or 1907. But by then, the only way to share the draw was with "everybody", despite the fact that a Dip game should be won by one(or at the most, probably two) players. Still, like I said, just for the endurance, we in the West showed, plus our stubbornness in fighting Kerry[Austria] for every center, well...simply by effort alone we deserved a share of the spoils, and I'm glad we got it.

One last thing--I want to extend my personal thanks to our GM. Gary Coughlan is, in my opinion, one of the best(if not THE best) GMs in the hobby. He is on-time constantly(a rarity these days; he and Steve Heinowski[pubber of Ter-ran] rank high in my books for that aspect); he was free with extra issues and appreciated us finding his (one) error in 16 game-years of play, and he was fair, fun and fabulous. Thanks, Gary--you were half the reason of playing!

ENDGAME STATEMENT FOR FRANCE (John Marsien) 1981 AN "Windsor/S-G-G"

It has never been my habit to write lengthy game end-statements, and since I have no doubt that Faz[England] has detailed the game's progress, I shall forbear to do so. Despite many frustrations and trans-Atlantic misunderstandings this has been one of my most enjoyable Diplomacy games, and much of the thanks for that must go to our splendid GM, whose efforts have been unsurpassed.

I keep a separate file for each of my games, and examination of this one reveals that I received 125 letters--71 from England, 25 from Germany, 13 from Austria, 8 from Italy, 7 from Russia and a solitary note from Malc Smith[Turkey]. The weight of paper received from Faz[England] exceeds anything I have experienced elsewhere, and shows why he thoroughly deserves a share in the draw.

This was a game in which fortunes fluctuated considerably--Italy for example was reduced to 1 centre in 1904, recovered to 4 in 1909, to be eliminated in 1916. I actually took the lead in 1904, bidding to dominate the position in the north-west. Unfortunately, the consequences were that Faz[England] was pushed, temporarily, into Jack's[Germany's] arms, while Kerry[Austria] allowed Al[Italy] to recover, and by 1911, I was reduced to owning Marseille, Portugal and St. Petersburg!

Jack Germany was the next to seek domination; to hold him in check we had to ask Kerry Austria for help, and in reducing Germany from 10 centres in 1907 to 7 thereafter, the stage was set for the second half of the game -- preventing an Austrian win. Faz England co-ordinated this very well, sending out form letters with suggested moves to Jack, Al and myself Germany, Italy and France, with relevant bits highlighted. Rather impersonal, but highly effective—and someone had to do it. The final drama concerned my determination that Italy should not share in the draw—an aim I succeeded in achieving.

My thanks must go firstly to Mark Fassio [England], whose voluminous and mostly persuasive correspondence made the game for me. There were misunderstandings, mostly when Faz took exception to comments that a blunt Englishman like myself regarded as unexceptional, but for most of the game we co-operated well.

Jack [Germany] and I had more frequent disagreements, from the first season

Jack Germany and I had more frequent disagreements, from the first season when he moved into Burgundy simply because England had written three letters to my one (no English player would make decisions purely on the basis of volume of correspondence), and our letters seem to have been largely made up of sports news, but nonetheless I must thank him for his patience and for holding the stalemate line even though he didn't want a draw.

Kerry Austria was, for most of the game, a silent friend--receptive to suggestions but rarely writing. Nonetheless he played well against poor opposition and merits congratulation.

Al Pearson[Italy] I found an erratic and vindictive opponent, and I must express pleasure at his elimination. No tears shed there.

Above all, though, I must thank our hard-working and ultra-efficient GK, Cary Coughlan. The advance copies of the adjudications (often a fortnight ahead of the zine) and occasional updates, and the excellent presentation of the results, greatly increased the enjoyment of the game.

Finally, after all but dropping out of the hobby, it should be noted that Malc Smith[Turkey] has recently resurfaced—in Belgium. This brings to mind the fact that this game must hold some sort of record for numbers of changes of address...

ENDGAME STATEMENT FOR TURKEY (Malc Smith) 1981 AN "Windsor/S-C-G"

I came into the game, Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, way back in 1981. Hell, I can hardly remember playing it. But what I do remember I'll try to jot down in a coherent manner. I chose to become a Malmberger for EE 4 years ago when I was still producing my xyn[zine], The Diplomat. I had just come across this strange country that played Diplomacy and almost spoke English and curiosity made me want to play Dip in an American xyn.

I came into the game in Spring 1902 as a standby for Alan What's-his-name's Turkey that went into civil disorder. Quite frankly, the country I was given was in a bad way. Russia had advanced extremely well against my new possession and I had to push him back.

Unfortunately, all my records and letters of this game were lost in one of my frequent house-movings a few years ago, and so my soggy memory is required here to ((Windsor's Wrap-Up continues on page 20))

fill in the details.

I remember playing with 3 units on the board, even though Turkey had captured a supply centre in 1901. This was, unfortunately, the time that Alan[the NMRing first Turkish player] decided to drop out, so I had to play with one unit short. This was, undoubtedly, the reason why Russia wanted to push home the advantage.

Austria-Hungary, my potential source of assistance, was, I believe, tied up elsewhere and so the only way that I could try and save myself was to contact Faz, England. I was praying for an English assault on Russia to keep off the pressure. But that didn't work too well, unfortunately. Russia took my homeland, Austria was spectating and Germany got too big for my interests.

And so the inevitable happened--I was knocked out of the game. My last fatal NMR was due to my moving home from my Middlesbrough college to Hartlepool and the deadline must have occurred when my orders were Mid-Atlantic.

Even though I had a short game I really enjoyed myself. Everyone was more than willing to write to me which seemed to lighten the onslaught a little.

Soon, someday, I hope to sign up for a full game and show that us Brits aren't such easy meat. But, please, don't give me Turkey next time.

((And that's the final chapter on Windsor. It's a little sad to think that when I finish this paragraph that 4 years I've spent with these guys will end, stretching back to when I first became a publisher. A GM could not have asked for a better bunch of people to play in his game. Thanks all and let's keep in touch.

THE LETTER COLUMN

Mostly this will be your guesses for the person pictured on this page. The newest picture contest and its details are to be found on page 33. But now let's get to this contest!

Jim Finley(Virginia, USA): "Obviously from Maine...
...this isn't you, is it, Gary? If so disregard everything from here on--

This guy is familiar--where have I seen him?

That's it--somewhere among the extras in Revenge Of

The Nerds...as a veteran nerd I can talk about them..he's got a microcomputer which he is trying to program to pick up women for him. He's a Trekkie, a D & D type, and a bit fan of Larry Flynt. He drives a faded green Pinto Hatchback piled full of beer cans(an Oly man), Jack-in-the-Box bags, and green-and-white striped computer printouts, and he has a "WHY BE NORMAL" bumper sticker. He likes arguing with religious people and sneering at the social graces.

As a Diplomacy player, his main problems are his visible naked greed and his inability to lie smoothly(or tell the truth smoothly, or tie his shoes smoothly...). His main advantages are his nitpicky mastery of the rules and his absolute ruthlessness. He does best playing Turkey; it suits his style and abilities. He is good at spotting tactical possibilities but has problems with the complex interpersonal quirks of playing Austria or Germany. He gets emotional about winning or losing. I don't know...he's probably a European using the Stars And Bars to confuse us; the nerd was invented in Europe, after all, and they still lead the world in quality and quantity(although, as in every other area of human endeavor except ice hockey and bean dip, Japan is moving into the lead." Keith Sherwood (California, USA): "I can't wait to hear the howls of indignation from the Northeasterners over the lout in the picture contest. Since I can't, I'll go ahead and start. Zero, loser and dumb ol' boy are the terms that first come to mind. You know, so much depends on what else is in a picture besides the person. This time, for instance, if it weren't for the audacious display of the Rebel flag, I would have confined my comments to "Zero, loser." This is the type of guy who gets his kicks reading obituaries and then crossing names out of phone books. His favorite TV show is "Dukes Of Hazzard" for its accurate portrayal of his Southern life-style, and his favorite book would be Red Badge Of Courage if ((continued on page 21))

John Pack (New Mexico, USA): "Well, I'm not sure I have 1,000 words for this new picture contest though it may be valued at 1,000. I bid 200. 230? All right, 250 and that's my final offer. Actually, I have no idea who it is. Whoever it is, he definitely ism't from the South unless he lives in the North. After all, who would want to give it away by having all those flags around? Besides, a real Southerner would be excited to have his pic taken with the Confederate flag. I'd say that he plays Austria best. Only such a short and dangerous position could get him excited. His favorite thing is to play a standby with only one unit in an incredibly rotten position. It makes it more exciting when he wins. He's still awaiting the excitement I'd say. Was he by chance the ex-pubber of The Schemer?" Malc Smith(Belgium): "Apparently an American citizen, this is easily derived by the multitude of silly flags and from the stoopid expression upon the chap's face. Now this is almost definitely an American, after all does he look capable of spelling "colour", "humour", or "cheque" correctly? Ha, I think not! Now what suvveners do I know that look as if they could use a decent meal, a haircut and a decent shirt? And who would I imagine would swank around with their hands on their hips and pouted lips? I don't know, and I don't think I ever want to....

...My guess? It's really a Dutchman trying to confuse us all, after all my impression of Dutch squaddies fits this guy perfectly; it's Jan Feringa the well-known Dutch marine and part-time tulip smuggler."

might be. Still, that's never stopped me before. So, let's examine the evidence shall we?

A redreck good ole boy? Not hardly...no hat, the flag on the wall is crooked (not to mention, upside down) and the one he's holding is not being waved crazily above his head..no self-respecting Southerner(not necessarily a contradiction of terms) would be caught dead like that. It's a Yank, or some other kind of foreigner, trying to LOOK the part. Now who would be that stupid? Well, Mazzer or Langley, but I've seen both and the two of them together are more lifeless than this yogurt head.

Is it Cathy Cunning? Hmm, no, she doesn't wear glasses. Greg Stewart? No, he doesn't wear clothes. My duck, Socrates? Nope, he looks smarter. Gee... .. this is tough. Maybe I should try another tactic. The guy's a Prohibition Party reject for sure... the slack jaw indicates Reagan Jugend, but... He likes all kinds of music, but especially stuff by the Monkees, and Barbra Streisand(before she went Punk).

He's not a student and he plays a mean South Africa in Final Conflict. (Am I frozen sclid yet, Coughlan?) What else? He's somebody Gary's met, because Gary hands those little flags out whereever he goes. What does that tell me? Nothing. Absolutely nothing. Tell you what, I'm going to take a wild stab and say.....Mark Fassio! Hey, I've got your system beat, Coughlan; I guess Faz every month from now on and sooner or later...BINGO!"

Thomas Franke(West Germany): "Shall I really guess who is the guy in the picture in the last picture contest? Might it be Christoph or am I wrong?"

The man in the picture is Christoph Schunck of West Germany and Thomas should know him very well—they are co-editors of the excellent West German zine Sauri Allstar Unlimited. He is from Trier, near Luxembourg and speaks excellent English. I met him when I went to Europe in 1983, and as several has mentioned, on that trip I gave out small Confederate flags as a souvenir in appreciation to the Europeans who were so nice to me while I was in their countries.

Not orly is the Confederate flag a rarity in Europe, I felt, but it also could not be burned in the demonstrations that Europeans are prone to, ha ha! But a few, including Christoph, wished for a full-sized banner Confederate flag and such loyalty did not go unrewarded! Belgium even has an organization called C.H.A.B. (Confederate Historical Association of Belgium) which has uniforms, mock battles and meetings.

Christoph was described by some roaming Belgian hobbyists as looking like an American university student and it must be so, because when he was in Belgium on his way to a con, a car stopped and asked him for directions, first in French and when he didn't understand, in English. He gave them the information in English and when the car drove away, he saw that the license plates showed it was from...west Germany! And Malc, you expatriate Briton you, most Europeans on the continent learn the British English, right down to the spelling and accent.

He is studying to be a lawyer and plays England in Bahnhof Zoo(see page 35). Scott Hanson says he reminds him of Mark Larzelere. I am sure that Christoph will have some response to your guesses, right Christoph!?

will have some response to your guesses, right Christoph!?

And Don Williams, Mark "Faz" Fassio's picture has already appeared in the contest so come up with a new system! The next picture contest is found on Next thing we'll have to decide is what the hell to do about VJ-Day."

The hostage situation in Lebanon got me so angry with the hollow-macho moron who is unfortunately our President that I sent my 1st telegram to a President. It said:

"Dear Mr. President, Stop playing with people's lives for the sake of symbols. In solidarity with Jimmy Palmer of Little Rock, I call for you to ask for the immediate release of the Shiite prisoners illegally held by Israel. End your selective morality."

And I signed my name and address. I'll bet this is one man from Memphis ole Ron won't mention in a national address!

SAVONLINNA is an independent subzine of EUROPE EXPRESS, edited by Michael Mills, 26 Laurel Rd., Sloatsburg, NY 10974, U.S.A.

Well, we're off and running with the third S.P.Q.R. game. Our six fresh players are Gary Coughlan; who edits a 'zine somewhere in Memphis, Mark Frueh; who gets confused with Irwin Frueh in St. Louis; Claude Gatron living on rue Masson in Winnipeg; Carl Gustav Sparre, living in Helsinki or Helsingfors, as he writes it; and Thomas Franke from the little burg of Dinslaken in Deutsheland. This should be a very, very novel game. Not only are we going to use an untried transport rule with timber, we are going to try to keep "up the spirit" of the game in the international mails --- I hope they all have lots of postage stamps handy.

In the next SAVONLINNA you'll see the announcement and the start of the auction, etc. Right now, I have about 35 copies of the S.P.Q.R. rules with the new map, which appeared in EE last time for anyone who wants one. I need standbys for this game and Chuff Afflerbach, who is GMing the second S.P.Q.R. game "Bread & Circuses" would also like some standbys, too! So, for 39¢ postage I'll send you a copy. Then you can write to me or Chuff and sign up as a standby.

If there's enough interest in a fourth game, I will pull teeth to find you all a good GM. You see, since S.P.Q.R. is a fairly involved little game, it's more than enough work for a GM to do just one; two games would be torture and we don't do that in this country, do we?

CHRCU REPORT ON THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE SENATE AND PEOPLE OF S.P.Q.R.II VOL. XIV SPRING 194 A.D.

PYRRHONISTS ON THE MARCH -- BATAVIAN FACTION COLLAPSES!

Argentoratium, capital of Germania, was the scene of the latest episode as yet another governor abandoned the helm of this drifting faction. Swidericus made his final address both a welcome for the Pyrrhonist expeditionary force and a farewell to his own Batavian troops. In his speech he emphasized the positive achievements of his administration: the recent passage in the Senate of his provincial defense proposals, and a "peace with honor" agreement with his neighbor to the east.

But the occasion was hardly festive. Swidericus appeared as exhausted as the Pyrrhonist vanguard he addressed, which had just completed a grueling forced-march into the city. The mood among The mood among the Batavian citizens remained somber in anticipation of some announcement regarding the Governor's successor. As yet no replacement has been named.

TREATY DISPUTE SPARKS DRAMATIC DEBATE

A Senate investigation into the seemingly endless complications besetting the central provinces became the stage for high drama, beginning with the arrival of the latest faction to claim authority over the troubled territories. As a service to its readers, B&C is pleased to print, verbatim, these speeches by the parties involved.

TRANSCRIPT OF THE ADDRESS DELIVERED TO THE S.P.Q.R. BY IMPERATOR MERCUTIUS OF GERMANIA:

"Senators, Patricians, fellow Romans, I stand before you-myself and the noble Marcus Juventus are here at your summons--and the mud of far-off Noricum has not yet crusted on our heels, such was our desire to heed the will of this most august body.

Our friends tell us, in whispered and fearful words, of dark rumors in Rome: rumors which have attracted the attention of yourselves, honorable Senators. Rumors, indeed, of gross impropriety, belligerent misconduct and traitorous dishonor, all laid at the feet of Marcutius and Marcus Juventus.

of Mercutius and Marcus Juventus.

With the indulgence of this Senate, I would attempt to speak a few words in defense of truth and put to timely death these cancerous rumors. After which, I assure you all, we shall remain silent as this Senate hears a fuller case against us.

Noble Homans, the burdens of far-off empire are exceedingly great. Daily, the barbarian kings test the fortitude of Roman will; strange ills befall citizens and soldiers alike; communications are few and seldom current; political intrigues, plots, are born and die like flies. At such a time, in such a place, a great man must govern, or have greatness thrust upon him....or be crushed by the burden which would make him great.

Alas, you all know the travail of the northern provinces these three years past. Since the death of Emperor Commodus, the governance of Oallia, Germania and Noricum has been at the whim of a madman and...and much worse. Weak-willed men have sought power and, having sought it, claimed it and, having claimed it, been destroyed by it as the gods have seen just. Poor Michaelius of Nidamerici!

Who was to follow but one Marcus Aurelius Andersonius? 'Quos Deus Vult Perdere Prius Dementat!'. (Whom the gods would destroy they first drive mad.) Senators, noble Patricians, you have but to consider his brief governorship to find the truth in my words: accords with the noble Lusitanians remain unsigned; treaties with the brave Severi permitted to lapse; those governors left to ponder the silences from Massilia. Legions went undermanned against the encroachments of the Goths, the Burgundians and the Juthungi; the greater measure of this Empire's forest wealth floats not on the seas, but lies rotting in the port of Massilia while shipyards on every coast of Mare Nostrum lie silent and desolate.

In the end, the dementia of Andersonius became all-consuming.

Shut away in his villa,

In the end, the dementia of Andersonius became all-consuming. Shut away in his villa, his paranoia ever increasing, Andersonius first conceived, then attempted, a most destructive act of unilateral folly-he called for the summons to Rome of six of the Empire's most loyal and brave Imperators.

Upon knowledge of this fact, rival factions rose to action. The streets of Massilia were full of chaos and moderate, reasoned voices went unheeded. Civil passions, aroused, spent themselves in petty revolts and violence against the Midamerici. Many died. In a week's time one faction-greater through strength of arms and intrigue than all others—consolidated power. And thus the Batavians, led by their jaded lion, the once noble Swidericus, ruled by acclaim and through public fear.

We embraced him not, but accepted his rule as a fact accomplished. And yet we swore, Marcus Juventus, myself and Imperator C. Lupastax Gythion, noble warrior of Gaul, to work toward his undoing. For you see, fellow Romans, we knew then what the rest of you will learn now—that the most venerable Swidericus was and is....

"....a TRAITOR to the Empire, a seditionist to Gallia, and a pox on the civil order espoused by the Equalists! Senators, Patricians, I hold before you a parchment, a parchment upon which is writ a treaty--if such it can be called -- The Treaty of Acquincum. It amounts to little more than a bill of sale for goods delivered and is a document of great danger. It bears the black mark of Swidericus and was his last official act."

TREATY OF ACQUINCUM

- 1) This treaty is between the Pyrrhonists and the Batavians. It must be ratified in time for the 194 Senate.
- 2) The Pyrrhonists agree to cast all their votes in favor of propositions 194A, B, and C.
- 3) Both parties agree not to declare war on the other in the years 194-196.
- The Pyrrhonists have full permission to move troops and commodities through Noricus and Germania through the year 195. In the year 196, the Pyrrhonists must remove all forces from Batavian
- 5) In the Spring 194, the Batavians must order all cohorts and barbarians of Legion Moricum to Argentoratium, and the LHQ Noricum must remain stacked with its barbarians throughout the turn as well.
- 6) At the time of the spring 194 Open Market, the Batavians will turn the Governorship of Noricum over to the Pyrrhonists for a price of 5 shipments of metal to be chosen by the Batavians.
- The Pyrrhonists will assume responsibility for the defense of Germania in the years 194-195. Should any faction not party to this treaty take Argentoratium by force, Noricum will be returned to the Batavians as compensation.
- 8) In the years 195-197, the Pyrrhonists and the Batavians agree to vote for proposals summoning Lusitanian imperators to Rome and proposals to transfer the Governorship of any Lusitanian province to a party of this treaty.

IMPERATOR MERCUTIUS RESUMED HIS SPEECH:

"Read it carefully; you will find Swidericus had intended to sell the province of Noricum, the defense of Germania and the security of Gallia into foreign hands by this writ.... What!? Ho!! Publius, move not! Your friends in Cappodocia know already of what I speak and will not be aided the more by your hasty exit. Stay, and you will yet learn of our good intentions. Perhaps even you, Publius, would be surprised to learn the price of this treason: '5 shipments of metal'. For five shipments of gold or silver-eighty sesterces, honored Senate!--Swidericus would dash the hopes of an Equalist peace so long nurtured here in Rome.

We know not where he has sone: sided by his Batavian friends he escended by might into

We know not where he has gone; aided by his Batavian friends, he escaped by night into the hinterlands, perhaps to plot new intrigues in the camps of barbarian kings? The evil that men do lives after them; the good is oft interred with their bones. So let it be with Swidericus. But, toward the ending of that evil I bring good news. Bear with me but a ge? The evil let it be with Swidericus. But, toward the ending of that evil I bring good news. Bear with me but a little longer, and you will be gladdened.

Earlier I spoke that moderate voices went unheard in the chaos after Andersonius' fall. I should have said, 'were not heard by enough men.' For, in fact, one man did heed the voices--one voice in particular--and sought its counsel.

That man was Imperator C. Lupastax Gythion, Warrior of Gaul and Defender of Marbonensis. With difficulty and much personal peril--the Batavians being unmerciful to those they deemed traitors--Gythion induced a certain group of men, among them a patrician of honored and noble lineage, to come to the succor of Massilia, Gallia, the northern provinces and the Empire. That faction, adherents to the god Mithua--Sol Invictus, as more commonly he is known--quickly found popularity with the cohorts of I Ulpia Rapax (Faction Legion) and XX Valeria Victrix (Legion Gallia). With appropriate ceremony, the Patrician, DONALDUS JACCUL WILLIAMUS, announced the ascent of the faction JACCUL INVICTUS--'Invictus' chosen to seek the favor and fortune of the gods. His first sot as the new Governor: to ransom back the province of Moricum, at great personal expense. Marcus Juventus, here, holds but

IMPERATOR JUVENTUS STEPPED FORWARD; A CLATTER OF GOLD AND SILVER RESOUNDED IN THE SILRAT CHAMBER AS HE DROPPED TWO SACKS TO THE FLOOR. MERCUTIUS CONCLUDED:

"Publius, tell your masters that, as a show of faith, The Treaty of Acquincum -- a dangerous document, even you must see that -- will be rendered a passing evil through this gift of 500 sesterces. Noble Senate, the Invictii also beseech you to accept 200 sesterces into the Imperial Treasury, for time and energies expended in this matter.

This sum has not been easily gotten. Indeed, in order to raise the strength of Home's far-off northern provinces-a need you yourselves saw and legislated on last session-I have been asked to seek a loan from this august body; a sum of 800 sesterces; part to be used to strengthen Rome's military will, part to compensate the Invictii for their most noble service in maintaining peace and righting the evils of Swidericus.

I have spoken too long-alas, I am a warrior of the fields, not the chamber, and mayhap I have over-stated our case. We humbly ask your understanding....

*... and now place our future, fortune, and fate into your hands. Fiat Justicia, Ruat Caelum.* (Let justice be done, though the heavens fall.)

THE SENIOR DELEGATE OF THE PYRHHONIST FACTION, THE SENATOR PROM PERGAMUM REFERRED TO AS "PUBLIUS", TOOK THE PODIUM AND OFFERED THIS REBUTTAL:

"We understand that there are some in the Empire who believe that the Batavian surrender of Moricum to the Pyrrhonists was a sell-out. It is our opinion that the treaty de-livering Noricum benefitted both sides. Suppose Swidericus had refused it. Where would the Batavians—and Invictii—be now?

Pirst, we would have sent 23 cohorts with three Imperators to Vindobona. This would have given one-to-one odds or better with an Imperator to the good. The total loss of all defenders would have been guaranteed, although possibly with heavy Pyrrhonist casualties. However, there would have been few or no Batavian cohorts available to counterattack.

Secondly, in Fall 194, the Lusitanians would have marched into Argentoratium with no The total loss of all

Thirdly,

Thirdly, in Spring 195, Noricum would have failed, the Invictii would have been treaties which insured adequate support.

And fourth, as proposals 194A and 194B would have failed, the Invictii would have been unable to fully mobilize the Gallian Legion. Germania would have gone to the Lusitanians in Spring 196.

The talk of sell-out was no doubt fueled by the Pyrrhonist move into Argentoratium.

The talk of sell-out was no doubt fueled by the Pyrrhonist move into Argentoratium.

The talk was are there strictly for recreation. We did not declare war and were The fact is that we are there strictly for recreation. We did not declare war and were permitted entry only because we pledged to assist the Batavians in quelling any uprisings which might threaten their control in Germania. We respect the sovereignty of the Jaccul Invictii in Gallia and Germania and wish them luck in their affairs.

RECOGNIZING THE NEED FOR A SYPREME COVET DECISION ON THE MATTER, THE HONORABLE AFFLERBACCHI DISPATCHED AN URGENT SUMMONS TO THE JUSTICES. THEY GATHERED FOR A CLOSED-DOOR SESSION WHI CONTINUED LONG INTO THE NIGHT. AT LAST THEY RMERGED, WEARY FROM DEBATE, BUT WITH A FINAL DECISION:

*The Court rejects as specious the notion that the treaty was voided a priori through Rule 7.31(2), due to the absence of an amendment clause. However, such a requirement must not be overlooked in the drafting of future agreements.

At issue, then, is the effort to revoke a committment on the eve of its effective date: whereas Rule 7.4 imposes a waiting period of one season. The Covrt recognizes one extenuating circumstance—the fact that the treaty in question was thrust upon the Invictia without prior approval or even knowledge. Monetheless, the treaty was duly signed by the proper authorities. It is not within the province of this panel to determine the mental state of Governor Swidericus at the time of the signing; but we do sincerely hope it has greatly improved since then. greatly improved since then.

Thus, by the time a cancellation of the treaty can be effected, the transfer of Noricula to the Pyrrhonists will be a fait accompli. And since negating that transfer was the experience of Noricula and State of Noricula a pressed aim of the Invictil, voiding the treaty becomes a useless exercise. Mercutius is instructed to reclaim his money bags from the Senate floor and accept instead the five shipments of silver in Singidumum as the price of Batavian folly. The Treaty of Acquincum shall stand.

And so, the Pyrrhonist faction would appear to be singularly blessed After the Sypreme Court ruled in their favor, the Severi delivered more good news. To aid the drought victims in Asia, the Severi is returning the three shipments of food still stored in Troia, which the Pyrrhonish had donated to Italia the year before. And in an act of unparalleled generosity, the Severi also pledged one half of their remaining supply. amounting to another three shipments in the city of Athenae. May the gods smile upon this selfless sacrifice!

PYRRHONISTS PRESS WESTWARD AS POPULARES MOVE EAST

Just as the Pyrrhonists took up forward positions along the far shores of Germania, the Legions under M. Claudius Miles began a massive shift in the opposite direction -- straight into the heart of the Pyrrhonist homeland! With every Pyrrhonist cohort committed to the defense of their newly-acquired Invictii "protectorate", the Populare troops had the highways to themselves on their march into Smyrna and Antioch. This coordinated land-sea exercise, though approved in advance by provincial authorities, still came as a shock to the citizens of the two Pyrrhonist capitals. They had not seen soldiers in the streets since their own Legions had marched off to the Hinterlands two years ago .... and suddenly their cities were awash with Populare troops and banners.

Rumors flared everywhere in the wake of the Populare march. The Praetorian escort, along to insure the neutrality of the exercise, had also seen to it that an Imperial Edict was tacked to the signpost of every trivium along the route. The wording was terse:

> "Effective Winter 194 A.D. THE ACCORDS OF THE NORTHLANDS shall be rendered null and void."

Roman law allows no more to be revealed. But if treaties must remain private, treasury transactions are a matter of public record. An audit of accounts shows a payment of 700 sesterces, in silver, to the Imperial Treasury by M. Claudius Miles. A subsequent deposit of 500% was made by the Treasury to the Pyrrhonist account. The current issue of RES PUBLICA (see supplement) is long on details regarding a reorganization of the Populare faction, but it stops short of an explanation for this latest burst of activity.

SAVONLINNA SUBSCRIPTION SERVICE

Hate international money orders? Think you're being cheated by the rate of exchange? Want to subscribe to EUROPA EXPRESS and other North American 'zines? Well, the SAVONLINNA SUBSCRIPTION SERVICE (SSS) can help you!

Here's How It Works

You send me cancelled stamps of any European country, and I send a check in your name to the North American 'zine publisher you want.

Stamp Condition

Cancelled stamps must be sent on the envelope paper on which they were posted. Cut around the stamps CAREFULLY. leaving a quarter-inch margin of paper around them (see below for sample). The stamps must be undamaged (no rips, no creases, etc.). Never send damaged stamps.

Sending Your Stamps To The SSS

Pack your stamps in a strong envelope or box to avoid shipping damage. In your letter tell me the weight of the stamps you've sent. Also tell me to whom I should send your check to in the U.S. And include a note for that person with your mailing address, et al.

Postage Refundable

I will reimburse you for the postage it takes to mail your shipment of stamps to me. I will include that amount in your check.

Rate of Payment
Payment is by weight for stamps received in the condition noted above.

For British stamps the payment rate is:

PRAETORIANS GIVE ASIA TO LAKEDAEMONI

In the quiet pre-dawn hours The Praetorians sent twenty cohorts into Smyrna and put an end to self-rule in Asia by exiling the local authorities to Melita without benefit of Senate repeal. In their place, The Praetorians installed a new regime, the Lakedaemoni, a regional group from Cappodocia to rule. Questor Don Michaelius Vlliamus was formally installed as Governor for Asia following a card game with the Praetorians, where it is reported he dropped 751$ to the Captain of the Guard.

The next deadline is 1 June 1985. Due on that date will be all bids on provinces #8-11 of Table 1 (Mauretania, Africa, Brittania, Germania). You may bid on all or none of them, as you wish, but the total amount of the bids you submit, including possible increases (3.21) may not exceed your current IT balance, as listed above. You may also submit bids for the other provinces, #12-15 on Table 1, but those will not be adjudicated until the deadline after 1 June's.

A very nice selection of faction names we have and a healthy amount of press for the very first go-round. If you scour the press, you will see that some factions did not just rise from the dust, but are actually current editions of famous families. If this level of involvement, you are going to have a very good time with this game win or lose...did he say "lose?"

Anyway, included herein are various other notes from me and some answers to questions that you've sent in. Please understand that I could answer your question publically for the benefit of all and I won't coach you privately through a rules' discussion.

up to see what was going on because she feared she would be seen. She didn't know' that the dirt and dust from the bags had blackened her face as efficiently as if she had done it herself.

She detected that there were periodic pauses as the bags were being unloaded. It appeared only one person was doing the unloading. The pause in bag movement was filled with the sound of something heavy being moved about. She decided to try a break for it during one of these pauses. Her adrenalin flowed as she waited for the next pause. As she imagined in her mind's eye the mailman pushing the cart of mail sacks away, she started to move forward. The mail bags had been undermined beneath where she was and as she moved forward, they fell, her along with them. She landed hard on her back on the bed of the truck. "Now I'll be caught!" she thought. She heard someone rush toward her. She looked up, unable to see anything but an outline of someone standing over her because of the backlighting. She was startled as the person bent over, touched her and asked if she was alright.

It was a woman's voice.

Memphis to The Virgin: I hope your zip code is right or you'll never get out of the post office. Also I wonder if the virgin will be considered lst-, 2nd- or 3rd class by the mail-woman?

Memphis to Iliad: Okay, we all meet here in July. Got it? Good!

FOCUS ON FAKES

No new fakes appeared in my mailbox since last issue but remember, if you fake something and send me a copy, I'll review it and give it publicity.

Some updates: Concerning the faking of the Dutch zine Brutus, one of its publishers, Jan Feringa, says that the fakers were Lex Pater and Jaap Jacobs, both of whom publish their own zines, we have.

Concerning my comments on reactions to the fake Rod Walker "I'm leaving the hobby" letter, Robert Sacks writes in: "I haven't seen what Mainardi wrote, but I hardly think my blurb in the May KGO[his zine, Known Game Openings] constitutes a 'bludgeoning'." I agree, but Robert you still should inform those same readers that Rod is not folding Diplomacy World with little or no refunds.

On the same matter, I received two very nice letters from Melinda Holley who informed me that she and Rod have discussed the fake, she's satisfied that the letter was a fake, and she and Rod have no hard feelings for each other. Good news!

I just wonder how any intelligent, sensitive human being can lower himself to sub to John Boardman's zine? In his May issue, Graustark #507, (which a friend sent to me), Boardman refers to me as: "and Gary Coughlan, who circulated some nauseatingly racist opinions over the name of John Michalski. (Needless to say, Linsey calls this piece of racist scum the publisher of the 'perennially top-ranked zine in North America?" Whatever Mr. Boardman is raving about, I had nothing to do with. I've seen a lawyer over this matter as I do not, especially not, like being referred to as "this piece of racist scum". But the lawyer said I would have to be able to prove my reputation was damaged by the fact that someone believed this libel. No intelligent person could believe this prick named John Boardman. He even steals subber money.

NEW PICTURE CONTEST: (The results of the last picture contest are found on page 20). You have until Friday, August 23, 1985 to send in your guesses about the person in the picture to the left. Is he single, married, a student, American, a fan of Bruce Springsteen, a publisher, the best England or Austria you'll ever meet, a tough guy or push-over, a fan of Margaret Thatcher or Walter Mondale or whatever comes to mind. Most EE subbers do not know the persons in these pics (the picture person is always a subber of EE) but that doesn't stop them from guessing. If you guess right, you win a free EE. Send your picture in and see what people think based only on a pic!

You will have to forgive EE's Belgian wonder once again, because this is

And you may forgive my "h" too, which has a tendency to become more and more overproud since it learnt that it gets pronounced in English...

Fine. This time, I'm going to babble about Belgian food and cuisine. Hold on.

BRILLAT-SAVARIN (1755-1820) used to say that a meal without cheese was like a pretty one-eved lady. And indeed the Belgians got the message since they produce about 100 different kinds of cheese.

In Thirrache (a border region between France and Hainaut), you can find and taste the "puant macéré" (macerated stinky), the name of which speaks by itself. East of Liège, in the small villages surrounding the city of Herve, you will appreciate the "remoudou" (twice milked), whose smell makes any plastic coating useless and ridiculous. In Brussels, we enjoy our "plattekeis" (cottage cheese), usually served with chives and black radish, our "ettekeis" (stinky cheese) and the explosive "pottekeis" (ettekeis refermented with strong beer).

Another Belgian speciality is "boudin", i.e. blood sausage when it's dark, or bland sausage when it's white, or green like in Liège, where they flavour it with cabbage. Fried white and black boudins, served with mashed potatoes and stewed apples, are the traditional meal on St Eloi's day. The name of this dish is "boudin entre ciel et terre" (between "eavens and Earth, the potatoes symbolizing the Earth and the apples "eavens). Obviously, since black boudins are made of pork blood exclusively, they are the perfect meal for Muslims...

Yet, the most mysterious Belgian dish is "choesels". In other words, veal pancreas, testicles and tail gently simmered in a mixture of beer and Madeira wine. It's awfully delicious.

The Brusselers are also fond of "caricoles", sea snails boiled with celery, pepper and onions. And don't sneer. Did I write anything against chewing gum? (When I was a kid, long long ago, smoking was authorised in school, but not chewing gum).

But the most famous Belgian speciality is fries, or "frites" as we call them. Victor MUGO had already observed that "you know when you're in Belgium as soon as you get agressed by the smell of fries". Any Belgian town, city, village, hamlet or just name-on-the-map has its "friterie", usually a stall where you can buy frites seasoned with mayonnaise, picalilli (Belgian pickles), mustard, curry or other funny sauces, to the exception of ketchup. The friteries also sell meatballs and saveloys, or the Belgian version of hot dogs (with sauer-kraut, cloves and juniper berries).

Ale: The bottom of the page is already near. I shall have to leave you now and have this damn typewriter overhauled. Drink a glass of Château la Lagune 67 my health and be happy till next time.

Summer has begun! Today is sunny, humid, and 33°C, and I'm inside typing?? Maybe I'll have to wait for a rainy day to finish this.

Playlist for this issue is from one of the toys we brought from Germany: a shortwave radio. It seems Voice of America and Radio Moscow are trying to outdo each other in boredom. Cricket results on BBC are more exciting. Radio Australia is the most exciting thing we've found so far. But where is Deutsche Welle?

I nearly forgot; a E/F draw has been proposed. Not voting equals a "no" vote. This is the earliest a draw can be passed by my houserules. I think there's a lot of game to be played yet, but somebody obviously disagrees...

FRANKREICH-GM: Deutschland!!! DEUTSCHLAND!!! We killed Germany! Germany is dead! France (and our valient French allies) should get credit!! Next thing I know you'll be calling me Italy---he's next to die.

FRANCE-RUSSIA: Our GMs showed me your picture from Eindhoven-con. You do have horns!!

ETA-ENG & FRA: I propose a E/F concession. I will vote yes; what is the point wasting time and money if you keep on allying, and don't write a decent letter? I've got better things to do!F

FRANCE-ITALY: Hi Ivol I'm typing this at Scott and Franke's (I'm here at Minn-Con). It was certainly an advantage having access to your moves and press!!!((And if you believe that...))
FRANCE-INGLAND: Susammen wir siegen!!!

IVO-SCOTT & FRAUKE: Hurray!!! The Boss is coming to town!! He gives two shows in a soccer stadium (cap. 55,000), both sold out. I've got tickets for the arena both days! With a little luck I will also see him twice in Wembly, London. Would that be a great summer! It is a great concert year altogether. Last month I saw Paul Young (ever heard of?), next week I'll go to Dire Straits, and in the end of June to Deep Purple!

SCOTT-IVO: I heard a lot about Paul Young in Germany, and he's had a single or two here. What's the big deal anyway, the singles here were nothing spectacular. I'd love to see Dire Straits if I had the chance, though the band isn't so popular here. Their new album is a bit disappointing to me. You'll have to tell me if Bruce looks married or not.

AN AMERICAN AT EUROCON

During our trip to Europe we were lucky enough to spend one day at Eurocon, the gaming convention put on by DUCOSIM in Eindhoven. We never did officially register for the con, I hope the Dutch gaming group doesn't send any goons over to collect their money.

It turned out that getting to the con was the worst part of all. We had spent a few days in Amsterdam, and we planned to stop in Eindhoven on our way back to Germany. Our first problem was when the Metro line in Amsterdam broke down on our way to the train station. We were able to find a tram to the station, but missed the train we had planned to take. No problem, another train was leaving in an hour. Once on that next train, we found out or tickets were no good. We had bought them the previous day, but noone bother to tell us that the tickets were good only on the day you bought them. At least we never had that problem anyplace else. Anyway, we had no choice but to curse the Dutch railways and pay out another 55 guilders (about $15).

Of course, we had left our Eurocon information in Minneapolis. Thomas Franke had told us that the con was near the train station, and I remembered a "Kennedylaan." We found Kennedylaan by the train station in Eindhoven, and saw nothing but an empty college sampus on one side and a construction site on the other. We checked at tourist information and two hotels; none had heard of a "Eurocon". We looked around a bit more and got caught in a rainsterm. Disappointed and drenched, we were giving up and taking the next train the Germany. On our way back to the train station, we saw a bunch of cars with foreign license plates at that construction site. Could that be Eurocon?? Sure enough, it was. The construction site was really a student center called "The Bunker." Appropriately named. We saw Thomas Franke's VW and knew we were at the right place.

We walked in and of course we recognized noone. It was a lot smaller than we had expected from the professional flyer we had seen; there were about 50 people in a room the size of a medium sized bar. To our delight, we found that the room was indeed a bar, with beer and sandwiches available (and very cheaply at that!) We were first recognized by Luc Dodinval, who recognized us from the cover from an old CHANTECLER. My god, that picture was taken at Origins in 1981! Have we really changed so little in four years?

Anyhow, once Luc saw us we quickly met Thomas Franke, Christoph Schunck, and Jazp Jacobs. I have to admit that we don't remember very many other names; there were just too many new faces and names we did not recognize. We did play in an informal Dip game, with Frauke as gamesmistress (Thomas, Christoph and I shared a draw), and I remember Luc was constantly taking pictures. I wish I remember the name of the one who conducted the game auction; his style and wit would make him a fine colonel (i.e. auctioneer) in America.

With so many countries represented, most of the people at the con spoke English with one another. There seemed to be little misunderstanding, except for Malc Smith's accent. (Of course, Minnesotans speak English with no accent at all, right?) The best game we saw was a French gangster game in which you shot at cardboard figures with a real gun that shot rubber-tipped darts.

Unfortunately, by the beginning of the evening I was feeling very tired and quite sick. (I hope I infected noone at the con...) We went out to eat with Thomas and Christoph at an Indonesian restaurant, and after that the evening was pretty much a blur. We went to Dortmund that night and had no problem sleeping in the back of Thomas' VW. We arrived at his apartment at 2 am, and we treated to beer and the company of Thamas' girlfriend Jutta. We get a wenderful breakfast the next morning and ran the decathalon that afternoon...on Thomas' computer. I was still feeling bad, and we left Dortmund earlier than we would have liked. Too bad...you all were nice people.

He may be out of the game, but Ed Wrobel has obliged us with a 4 page desciption of his job with the federal government. Unfortunately, it is in "bureau-ese" and I can't make much sense of it. Rather than attempt a translation into English, I'll reprint the main paragraph and you people can try to understand it.

VERBOTEN AUF GREENS

As a senior Hearings and Appeals Analyst in one of the sections of the Civil Actions Braidily Office of Appeals Operations, participates in the full range of work of the section to which assigned, including development and research on precedent-setting and controversial cases. Incumbent provides leadership and training for trainee analysts, serves as a leader on projects requiring the assignment of a group of analysts and/or support staff and serves as acting the chief in the absence of the section chief. The Civil Actions Breach is the staff arm of the Appeals Council in matters involving litigation and serves, generally, as a legal support activity to the Department. The principal functions of the analyst position are to provide technical disposition to the Appeals Council with respect to civil actions and to facilitate the disposition of such litigation by direct contact with Staff Attorneys in the Office of the General Counsel, HES; Assistant Regional Attorneys, HES; and the various Assistant United States Attorneys to whom the cases are assigned for defense or other purposes.

Now for a plug! We are going to publish a zine again! It will be called PORTES MIT MAYO, and our lst issue will be ready this month. We hope to have an international letter collumn dealing with politics, and we'll publish articles on real life Diplomacy and current issues. Everyone in this game will see the first issue, and anyone else who wants to take a look can just send us a post card. Our address is at the beginning of the game, you know. And don't worry, BAHNHOF ZOO will keep on being your favorite multinational subtine. Thanks to Gary, Christoph & Thomas, and Luc for publishing this!

DUBICUS WOMEN - The police made a descent on Canal street yesterday and arrested a dozen or more of dubious women, who were flaunting their new clothes and their sinfulness in the face of passers by, which latter had no business to be passing by in such a place on Sunday. The women were exceedingly irate at the interference of the police, and addressed them in a corrotive sublimate style, interspersed among which were oaths, little and big blasphemes, and many threats of revenge. They were taken to the watch house, and this morning were fined respectively from $5 to $10 each. Some of them paid up, but the remainder went to the penitentiary to do the State "some service."

(Buffalo Daily Republic, May 7, 1860)

POLICE COURT.—BEFORE JUSTICE BIDWELL - James O'Donnell, for committing an assault and battery on Mary, his wife, was fined the moderate sum of $1.50.

Wm. Kennedy committed an offence of the above nature on Chas. Miller. Not decided.

John Knorr, Henry Knorr, John Ulrick and John Casper, were arraigned for an indiscriminate assault upon Hugh Donahue. They were adjudged guilty of that same and fined $5 each.

The same four unfortunate individuals were also brought up on a charge of committing an assault upon Alexander Vance. John Ulrick and John Casper were discharged, and John and Henry Knorr were fined - the former $10, and the latter $15.

Emily Benenger, it was alleged, committed an assault on a female woman who rejoices in the aristocratic and poetical name of Rosina Fountenelle, but the charge was not substantiated, and Emily was discharged.

Robert Geese made a goose of himself, and, in connection with Jon. McCormick, engaged in an enterprise of a burglarious nature. He was brought up and committed for further examination.

Frank Hammond, for an assault upon Conrad Herks, was fined $8. Thomas Murphy, an Irishman by trade, was brought from jail for examination on a charge of stealing a certain amount in gold and silver coin from Michael Guthrie. When we left the office, Mistress Guthrie was on the stand and she displayed an amount of talent in mixing up things, which would be a fortune to a bar keeper.

(Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, April 18, 1860)

WHO HAS LOST A SILVER TEA-POT? - An old German woman was arrested yesterday, having in her possession a silver tea-pot, which she was offering for sale at a Jew shop, and which she is supposed to have stolen from some house where she was begging. The owner can hear of the missing article by calling at the Police Court. The woman was committed to jail.
