BNC COMMENTS

I was approached by Bruce Garyk to look at the regularity of his adaption of Mark Berch's "War by Automatic Pilot", to whit, "Missed Spring or Fall Moves. All units repeat their moves of the previous season...Should a unit have changed positions since that time, the unit will hold...Support for a unit which has changed positions in this manner will no longer be valid, and the supporting unit will hold...Missed Winter Builds. A country's build(s) of the previous Winter season will be repeated..." Bruce would have employed the standard practice of replacing a player who NMRs consecutively. He will not allow a SO1 turn to be processed without 7 orders on file. He had no provision ((that I could see)) for WO1.

I want to take a few minutes here to explain to the uninitiated just how these things work, at least with me. For any major decision I shall always secure at least one second opinion, (1) just on the outside chance that I have not seen things in their proper perspective; or several opinions if (2) I am having a tough time making a decision in the first place. Any replies I get are kept in confidence for no other reason that I am NOT here to start hobby feuds. When I do finally make a decision, I am afraid you can rant, rave, and blow all the wind you want to; but you'll have to do so at me alone, and quite frankly I don't give a rat's -behind-. If you are the type who must resort to this type of childish behavior, take it out to the playground where it belongs.

I will try to acquire both sides of any "story", and this may take a lot of time as people who can competently state opposing views may be few and far between. I do appreciate those people who responded to my inquiries, and just because I do not follow verbatum what you've written doesn't mean I don't respect your opinion. On the whole, I will lean to past-BNCs before others, although if I am soliciting a large number of comments, I will lean towards general hobby opinions.

Some interesting sidenotes to this investigation/situation...I wondered at those who said WAP should be allowed because it's innovative then cite past practice as evidence.
I have been threatened that an adverse decision will cause that person to quit GMing forever. I have been told certain hobby members want to use this as a platform to oust support for the current BNC (me), I presume replacing me with one of their own choosing. One of the staunchest supporters of WAP states, "...the security offered by the rule is minimal at best." All this makes me realize why no one has stuck around in this job for any length of time; however...

Our topic, WAP, comes under the heading of "GM interference", and I find there is a lot of confusion as to what this means. Generally when I said "GM interference", people automatically thought of "GM tampering". For the uninitiated, tampering means the physical insertion of the GM into a game. There are, however, other ways in which a GM can interfere without physically moving the pieces. FOr example, interference can also be the setting up or the creation of a situation that is unfair to a specific person or group of players. A GM could also interfere by violating the rulebook in a way not necessitated by the postal aspect of play. These latter two are examples of a GM interfering with -a- game of Diplomacy as opposed to interfering with -the- ((or one particular)) game of Diplomacy.

I would like to thank Bruce for bringing this up, albiet quite reluctantly. It has been a rather quiet term as BNC to date, and this has stirred up quite some controversy. However, this is the preferred way to go, as it is a lot easier to handle problems before they occur rather than after. So let's get on with the meat of the matter.

We are dealing with Rule XIV-3, "Civil Disorder"; and this is one of the most poorly written rules in the book. It is ambiguous. The last sentence, "Players should decide what policies they will follow in this regard in advance of starting the game.", leaves one wondering whether it applies strictly to the sentence above it or the whole paragraph. Both could legitimately be interpretations. The key word here is "policies" as opposed to the singular "policy". Of course, what is legit, is a damn good question. The bad thing here is that a more liberal interpretation could go as far as to say a GM could write an NMRing player's orders himself to avoid a missed move. Hey, what the hell, "if everyone agrees to it before the game starts..." This, of course, we know to be pure cow manure! The key then becomes where to draw the line; and, once drawn, has WAP gone over it?

Let us then analyze WAP; first by determining what it is not. It is not GM tampering. The GM is not making the moves, period. He is following a prescribed set of orders made by the player. He has not influenced or prejudiced these orders.

It is not an employment of general orders. ((General orders is/are a statement left by the player to attack/ally with player A, B, C...with the GM either making the actual moves himself or employing a "local" person to make the moves for the player. In "general orders" the person making the actual moves is unknown to the remaining players in the game, enemies and allies alike. Anonymous players, whether by general orders, anonymous SBs, gunboat, or whatever, ware not consistent with the concepts of a regular game of Diplomacy.)) In the case of WAP, though, the players do know who is submitting orders, even if it is by default; and they have, albiet limited, an opportunity to communicate with the player/position who is making the actual moves.

It is not, in this case, an employment of perpetual orders. ((Perpetual orders is/are a single set of orders that a player submits to be used from this time forward, forever. The employment of "general orders" is a perversion of the concept of a game of Diplomacy having to have "players" (though borderline passable). A regular game of Diplomacy employs seven players. Of course, as the game progresses, the "7" portion of this changes, but the concept of "player" does not. A player is someone who is playing the game. For Ghod's sake, be honest people. Someone who is employing perpetual orders is no longer playing that particular game, period.)) In our version of WAP, however, the GM is not permitting the use of perpetuals as the NMRing player will be replaced in what has become to be accepted as normal procedure for handling dropping players.

It is not NMR prevention as employment of a "collect call" list would be. The former seeks to prevent an NMR by having the player of record submit a new order. WAP, on the other hand, is a reaction to an NMR: nothing more, nothing less.

A finer line must be drawn in the next area: whether WAP represents a legitimate adaption of the game to postal play, as neutal 1901 orders are. This is a touchy situation. (Neutral 01 orders are a series of preordained moves/builds that each country will make in the event the controlling player misses his move. They are made known in advance to all people in the game, and are good only in 1901.)) In a ftf game, for which these rules were devised, one should be able to count on the fact that if Player A agrees to play a game, he is there (physically), a real person, and is actually playing the game. In PBM, however, since there can be quite a time differential between signing up for a game and the actual commencement thereof, this may not be so. So, begrudgingly BNCs conceed that at least in 1901, the dropping of a player from a postal game represents a unique circumstance allowing for some adaption. After 1901...Some people seem to believe that a "drop" is not a legiti-mate part of the postal hobby. Well, for those of you who believe thusly, I have bad news. Looking at E70, which I have before me, only two game finishes did not have a drop. One was a very fast E-mail game; and the other, while lacking a drop, had a resignation. Drops are a part of the postal hobby. (But) Drops are also a part of the ftf hobby which was why we have the CD rule in the first place. I have been told that WAP's virtue is that it's non-disruptive, that it preserves the integrity of the game. Well, folks, a missed move is just as much a part of the game as A WAR-GAL. I can just see the holy terror that would be raised if some GM decided that A WAR-GAL destroyed the integrity of the game and wouldn't allow it. An NMR is as much a part of our game as A WAR-GAL is. Avoiding the NMR is one thing, reacting to it is another. To some degree WAP falls into this category, but as a convenience--not a virtue.

A good point is made, and I see nothing wrong with a player stating to the GM, "Use these orders as preliminaries for the next season," any more that I can judge against him saying "Call me collect if you don't get any orders by the deadline." They are conveniences. So, WAP under this guideline squeaks by as OK, since the GM is just presuming this (legal) statement for all players in the game.

Another consideration is, is it fair? Is it? Well, let's look at some hypos. Two sets of orders (A GAL-BUD w/S VIE, RUM) and (A SER-BUD w/S TRI). Both players miss in the Fall. Who gets BUD? What is fair? Oh, you say, a bit farfetched. Perhaps, but you'd best have a "reason" why your system was unfair to give to the player.
Ture, that is a bit farfetched. The odds of even having two missed moves by countries that could conflict are remote; that they should conflict like the above is much further remote (sic). Let's take a more realistic example: Turkey and Italy build 1 in '01, both gain 1 SC and both miss Winter '02. Turkey builds by WAP, Italy cannot - his area is already occupied. What is fair? Or perhaps: Germany built -0- in 1902, France built 2; both gain 2 SCs in 1903 and both miss Winter 1903. Is it fair?

What about builds in general? Builds are supposed to be the rewards for good play.
Good play. Missing a move is not something that should be rewarded. That is not fair to the players who did play well.

In summation, then:
(1) If you consider WAP to be nothing more than a statement that this season's orders are to be considered to be preliminaries for the next season, you are OK. ((Due note that by definition this excludes all Winter seasons.))

(2) If you try to squeeze that extra mile out of WAP to interfere in or create an unfair situation in the game, you are not. Games will be noted to that effect.

(3) If you employ WAP without some consideration for S1901, you are ridiculous.

For those who have helped by responding when called on, I want to say things. To that person who said that he would support my decision even if it went against him,

PUBLISHER COMMENTS
I'd like to thank everyone who sent me compliments, suggestions, etc., on how to improve EVERYTHING. I APPRECIATE ALL YOUR COMMENTS AND WILL ALWAYS CONSIDER THEM.
Hopefully, I will be able to incorporate as many of them as possible.

BNC Comments - Despite a very generous contribution from Hugh Christie and the updating of several expired subs, the BNC office was operated at a loss for the Jan-Mar period. Obviously this cannot continue especially as we expect income to tail off this summer. I would hope the hobby will appreciate an efficiently run office enough to continue to support it financially.

STATE OF THE HOBBY
For the Spring term this year we had 48 games start; over half what was started for the entire year of 1986. Though game starts are falling off as expected this period, we are as far along as we were in August of last year. A lot of this can be attributed to the introduction of several fine new zines, let's hope the trend continues.

Avalon Hill, specifically Tom Shaw, has prepared a new professionally done flyer for inclusion in the new run of Diplomacy games and is making them available to any hobby devotee who would like to place them in local retail outlets, to promote interest in the game and the PBM hobby. Anyone who feels he/she could distribute these flyers should write to Tom and request what quantity you need. c/o 4517

Regarding inserts in EVERYTHING - Both Melinda and I are trying very hard to meet our targeted mailing dates so any inserts must be cleared by us well in advance of our mailing schedule. All inserts MUST be hobby related and cleared in advance. So if you want an insert in the Fall issue, please keep this in mind. Also, we would prefer that you send us the necessary copies and we will insert them. Please send a sample at first and then, if approved, we will let you know how many copies are needed. Please keep in mind that we are trying this as an experiment.
