BNC Comments

Not much to report from here, things are moving along just fine in the BNC business. This issue you'll find a little thin as it is only reporting three months worth of activity instead of the normal four. Expect the next issue out in late October/early November.

Inside, Mark Nelson has provided us with two articles. One examines the Orphan Effect on games; while the other updates his report from F90 on "Q Ratings". As always, his statistical insight is very interesting.

The only item of note that I have is that I'm going to be closing the extra EMail address (BNCYork@aol.com) in short order. It sees little activity as much of the mailing goes to my normal EMail on CIS or "WAndrew@aol.com". Also, the idea behind checking this once a week has gone by the wayside as I try to turn around any inquiry immediately.

Have a GREAT Summer!!!

WHAT EFFECT DOES THE ORPHANING PROCESS HAVE UPON GAMES?
BY MARK NELSON

1. Introduction

In Everything 90 I analyzed completed regular diplomacy games reported in Everything 85 (May 1992) through Everything 88 (September 1993). The games were divided into games played postally and games played over the CompuServe network. In order to compare postal games to CompuServe games I used three indicator functions: the percentage number of games finishing in a win (the WIN number), the average number of dropouts per game (the DROPOUT number) and the average length of a game (the LENGTH number). The dependence of the WIN number upon the DROPOUT number was also examined.

By an orphan game I mean either a game which changed zine (1), usually with a change in GM, or which had a change in GM whilst remaining in the same zine. In the article that appeared in Everything 90 orphaned games were discarded from my datasets because "these processes often cause dropouts". The purpose of this article is to compare indicator functions for non-orphaned games to orphaned games to determine what effect, if any, the orphaning process has on a game. This article only considers postal games because the number of orphaned games on CompuServe (6) is too small.

Glancing through back issues of Everything orphan games appear to belong to one of two distinct categories. Frequently a couple of players will drop out in the period in which the game is being orphaned and when the game restarts the remaining players from the start zine will either agree a draw or a concession. Alternatively new players may enter the game and their enthusiasm ensures that the game continues for many more years. When games finish shortly after restarting it is natural to ask if this result is the 'right' result. Does orphaning effect the game result, does orphaning effect how long the game will last?

To examine these questions we will use a naive approach: A game is either orphaned or not orphaned. A more sophisticated approach would try to measure the 'completion index' of a game at the time of the fold. By 'completion index' I mean a measure of how near the game has come to finishing. The variation of indicator functions with completion index would then be analyzed. A more sophisticated approach might also examine the effect of multiple orphaning and, perhaps most importantly, the effect that the time-delay between a zine folding and the games restarting has on the indicator functions. Do 'smooth' folds have less effect on games than 'poor' folds?

Games reported in Everything 85 (May 1992) through Everything 91 (March 1995) are considered. During this period there were 181 non-orphaned games reported and 67 orphaned games. Of the orphaned games 2 were games in which there was only a change in the GM, I have discarded these games from the survey.

2. Statistical Analysis

Of the 247 regular postal games reported in this three-year period 65, 26.4%, were orphaned. One in four reported games were orphaned. Is this a historically low, average or high value? Is it an acceptable rate? By examining back-issues of Everything I hope to answer the former question at a latter date.

Table One shows what values the indicator functions take on the two data sets. I am very surprised to discover that the average year of finish between non-orphaned and orphaned games is indistinguishable. This in itself doesn't mean much. It could be a fluke, in the sense that orphan games are either much shorter or considerable longer than non-orphaned games and the figures average to the non-orphaned value. Table Two shows the percentage of games finish in a given year, or spread of years. Although the sample size is small the standard deviation for non-orphan and orphaned games are similar and it appears that the orphaning process has no effect on the game-length.

As expected, and as predicted in Everything 90, orphaned games have more dropouts than non-orphaned games. On average there are 1.25 more dropouts in orphaned games. The tendency for more dropouts to occur in orphaned games is also demonstrated in Table Three: Nearly 50% of all non-orphaned games have two, or fewer, dropouts whilst the corresponding figure for orphaned games is only 17%. Finally observe that the WIN number for orphaned games is approximately 125% bigger than the corresponding number for non-orphaned games --- orphaned games are more likely to finish in a win.

Table Three. Percentage number of games finishing with n-dropouts

When non-orphaned games are analysed there is a (non-linear) relationship between the number of dropouts and the chance that the game finishes in a win. This is most easily seen when the data is presented as a rolling average. Is the same phenomenon observed in orphaned games? Are orphaned games with few dropouts more, or less, akin to their non-orphaned counterparts than those games with many dropouts? Table Four provides some inconclusive answers.

Drops	NON-ORPHANED	ORPHANED
0-2	44.1	63.6
1-3	43.1	70.8
2-4	50.0	66.7
3-5	53.9	63.0
4-6	56.7	60.0
5-7	53.4	61.5

Table Four. The percentage of games finishing in a win as a function of the rolling number of dropouts in a game.

Regardless of the number of dropouts orphaned games are more likely to end in a win than their non-orphaned counterpart. Surprisingly this trend is more distinctive for games with fewer dropouts than for games with more dropouts. This is a tentative result since the survey sample for orphaned games with few dropouts is small.

We have noticed that orphaning effects the WIN number. Does it also effect the type of draw? To answer this question I have devised the DRAW SPECTRUM. The DRAW SPECTRUM is the percentage number of drawn-games which finish in a n-way draw. Recall that the sample size of drawn orphaned games is very small (22 games) before examining Table Five.

	2D	3D	4D	5D	6D	7D

3.0 Discussion

In this article non-orphaned and orphaned postal games reported in Everything 85 (May 1992) through Everything 91 (March 1995) have been analysed.

- * One game in four (26.5%) that has been reported has been orphaned.
- * The orphaning process does not, on average, effect how long a game takes to play.
- * Orphaned games have, on average, 1.25 more dropouts than non-orphaned games.
- * Only one orphaned game in five (17%) has two, or fewer, dropouts.
- * Orphaned games are more likely to finish in a win and this relationship holds regardless of the number of dropouts.
- * There haven't been enough orphan drawn games to compare the effect of orphaning on the type of draw.

Footnotes.

- (1) When the change in the name of the zine was considered to be 'cosmetic', the game was not treated as an orphan. A cosmetic change means that either that the editor changed the name of the zine, but nothing else changed, or that the editor folded but continued to run games by flyer without a noticeable break.

The following name changes were considered to be cosmetic:
 The Boob Report/The Abyssinian Prince, Cathy's Ramblings/Rambling By Moonlight, Dipadeedoodah!/flyer/Akrasia, Penguin Dip/Black Tie Affairs, Vertigo/Meet George Jetson and Don Del Grande's various zines.

TABLE ONE. Statistical details on zines which gave run five, or more, non-orphaned games to completion. (1) CCC is Carolina Command and Commentary. (2) TCD is The Canadian Diplomat.

Although zines which have a reputation as places to play good games of diplomacy also have high Q-values too much emphasis should not be placed on the ranking of zines by Q-value; the sample size is small and the standard deviation in the number of dropouts and gamelength is large. A GM that has a solid core of players that play in a couple of games with a torpid turnaround could show up very highly in this survey, this would not necessarily be a place to play. Let us mearily note that Boast and Graustark appear to the 'best' zines to play in, followed closely by CCC, Cheesecake and Hoodwink and then Maniac's Paradise.

Remember --- The Q ranking is a guide, it does not provide the definitive answer to finding the zine which runs the 'best' games in the hobby!
