Hoosier Archives was originally a periodic listing of the Diplemacy archives of Walter Bookanan, R. R. #3, Lebanon, Indiana #6052, telephone (317) #82 282%; Archives Director, Postal Diplomacy Congress, and V-P/Treas., International Diplomacy Association. It is now primerily a Diplomacy genzine devoted to articles on good play, demonstration games such as the Multiple Winners Invitational (1972CR) now in progress, rating systems and game news. Information from the crebives is vital for all this and is available to the public as well. Although the archives is virtually complete in at least meron form, missing undamaged criginals are solicited, either for purchase or a loan to permit meroxing. (See the last archives listing in Hoosier Archives #5) for zines needed.) Many original spaces are now available from the archives; more are solicited so as to make them available to others. A subscription to Hoosier Archives is 13/62.00 or 6/$1.00; back issues are 15% apiece (20% discount for all available). Ask for #87 to get a list of all articles through #90. This is Albatross Press publication #96.

SPECIAL ISSUE

In an effort to eliminate the feuding that is all too prevalent in Diplomacy today, I was delighted to receive from Jeff Fower the latest Broblingmag Rating List. Due to the length of both of these items I don't have room to include them in the next issue since, among other things, it will chronicle the Fall 1901 moves for the Multiple Winner Invitational. Therefore, I have decided to put cut this special issue, this being a "long weekend" and all (which means that "Associate Editors" have to labor twice as much this weekend! CA--). Also this will put us an issue shead so that when law finals roll around, I can skip a week and, as I'm sure will be the case, study some much neglected subjects!

A NEW DEFIONACY COMMUNITY: A WHITE PAPER by Larry Peery

It is a great pleasure to be allowed to appear in this distinguished magazine. I know how important this forum is to the formulation of public views on important Diplomacy matters. For that reason, I am very happy to appear in Hoosier Archives to discuss the interorganizational relations of the Diplomacy community generally and the "foreign policy" of the International Diplomacy Association in particular. I believe these are subjects of interest to all thoughtful Diplomacy players.

Let me begin with a conlousion. As a result of initiatives taken by Council members of the IDA at the Chicago DIFCON in interorganizational affairs, the prestige of the IDA throughout the Diplomacy community has never been greater. Operating on the tasic principle that "there is no greater gift that one age could make to the ages that follow than to forge the key to a lasting peace," the Council has consistently directed every step to that end, as a result, the Diplomacy community today is a much less hostile place than it was a year ago, and, hopefully, the first foundations for a genuinely stable and lasting peace in the community have been laid.

The IDA Council has resisted the temptation to assume an organizational mortgage—to buy temporary peace at the cost of future instability. Real peace cannot be bought with the future; it must be built for the future. That takes patience and careful planning. It takes a willingness to break new ground in improving relationships with former adversaries. It takes strength and a continuing fidelity to solemn obligations and to principles. That is the path the IDA Council has chosen. That is why our standing is at an all time high—both with our friends and with our adversaries. That is why—in the venacular of the day—"The Diplomacy community is not so up tight," as it was a year ago.

At Chicago, in addition to a visit with John Beshara, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Diplomacy Association, by several Council members, talks were held with Alian Calhamer, the designer of the game; John Moot, of Games Research; and a host of Diplomacy publishers and players.

With most of these people our relations have been friendly and close. With some, however, they have been, at best, "correct" and limited. Hepefully, these discussions explained our hopes and our efforts for a more peaceful community, and sought their views on how such a community could best be achieved. In this article I would like to discuss with you some of the things I discussed with them.

What kind of a Diplomacy community do we seek? First of all, it should be a community in which players, gamesmasters and publishers—whether friends or enemies, partners or competitors -- talk to each other.

During the formation of IDA the prevailing belief was that, because we had important differences with our adversaries, we could not talk. The Council has proceeded from the opposite belief—that because we have important differences, we must talk. Of course, the Council knew that dialogue alone would not bridge the differences; but it also known that without dialogue, they might never be bridged.

The policy of IDA, therefore, is based on the conviction that communication between strangers, and negotiations between adversaries, serves the cause of a more tranquil community.

That is why the meetings at Chicago, both within the TDA membership and leadership, and with non-members, were so important; they established an assential dialogue between us. We must now move from dialogue to concrete negotiation and then to a growing cooperation.

During my Chicago discussions, I found a general appreciation of this. And I made clear our belief that what is working for us can work for others. Nothing can be none productive than a willingness in all areas of Diplomacy to move away from the rigidities of the past year or so.

The second characteristic of the peaceful community in Diplomacy we seek is closely related to the first. As that community must be marked by dialogue and negotiation, so too must it be open to the free flow of players, magazines, and ideas. We are convinced that the cause of peace is advanced by contact among players, magazines and organizations and by a free exchange of ideas at all levels. Thus, in any area such contact has been limited, we are seeking to enlarge it.

The third characteristic of the peaceful Diplomacy community we seek is that there must be universal respect for the right of every player, magazine and organization to independence, sovereignity, and to its own internal development free of outside interference.

In pressing for the removal of tarriers to free contact, we have no interest in meddling in anybody's internal affairs. On the contrary, our policy springs from a different and positive conviction—that more open relations will release tensions, and will promote the normal human communication and that encourages people and organizations to live, and let live, in peace and friendship.

We in the IDA feel strongly, most strongly, about the right of other organizations to develop according to their own desires because we fought a hard battle to win those rights for ourselves. We respect them for others. Indeed, we regard these rights as fundamental to peaceful relations among organizations. They must apply all the time, not just some of the time, And they must apply in all cases, not just some cases.

This principle is basic to our relations with other groups. We are ready for an improvement or expansion of relations at whatever pace and in whatever manner they themselves are prepared to follow.

In time, we hope to move from "coexistence" toward a more active and cooperative relationship. Building on the recognition of each organization's right to run its own affairs, we are working for a community in which former adversaries can, not only coexist in peace, but also cooperate in peace.

The fourth major characteristic of the peaceful Diplonacy community we seek is a willingness among its members, particularly publishers, to reduce their reliance on negative propaganda as a viable instrument of making personal and magazine policy. Even today, a growing willingness to limit the use of such propaganda is evident.

We therefore hope and expect that the principles of peaceful relations to which we and the Diplomacy Association committed ourselves in Chicago will be more than idle social chatter. For our part, we will certainly do our best to translate them into practical realities.

As we move toward new and more constructive relationsips with former adversaries, it is all the more important that we preserve a matrix of stability. How can we do so?

First, by ensuring that the search for new relationships will not be at the expense of our principles.

Second, by recognizing that these relationships will improve our own creditability only if, in pursueing them, we maintain these principles,

Third, by affirming by work and deed that a peaceful community will not be soughtas it could not be achieved -- through an abandonment of our obligations and interests.

This, then, is the kird of peaceful Diplomacy community which we would like to see and toward which IDA Council policies are directed:

--- A community in which dialogue and negotiation have replaced monologue and conflict;

-A community in which people can move freely and easily across organizational torders: --- A community in which recognition of the sovereignity and independence of all players. magazines and organizations is the first principle of Diplomacy;

--- A community in which negative propagands is relied on less and less as an instance to

of personal and magazine policy.

Jeff Power

A year ago would anyone have thought such a community possible in our time? Even today, no one would pretend that it will be achieved soon or that the problems and difficulties are not formidable. But for the first time since Veritas Vincit, such a community is cossible.

We cannot help to turn that possibility into a reality is we withdraw to our own marasines and organizations. To help build an enduring peace we need to remain responsibly engaged in Diplomacy community affairs,

The International Diplomacy Association must and will remain so engaged, (Speaking of the IDA, for information on how you can kinthis rapidly growing service organization (membership now well over 100), write the Acting Membership Secretary, Steve Bell, at 5605 Virgilwood Drive, Greensboro, N.C. 27409.

Also, since we have some room left before the honored feature of the Brobdingmag Rating List, we will finish out the Calhamer Point Rating List By Country that was started in Housier Archives #76.)

THE BROBDINGNAG RATING LIST

The BROB rating list is maintained and edited by Jeff Power, 221 1942 Fall, Princeton University, Princeton, NJ 08540. Inquiries and complaints should be addressed there. The list is published by Walt Buchanan and cam be obtained only from him.

Only active players have been included in this listing to the best of my knowledge. Oversights are unavoidable, however, and I depend on you to provide information leading to the list's correction and improvement.
