95

August 21, 1989

Thanks to several of you we now have the missing back issues of MAGUS. So now what is my excuse? Can't think of one at the moment.

Things have been a bit hectic around here. Megan went back to Sacramento last Tuesday. It seemed as if the only time I spent with her was on the trips to and from the airport. Kim is still with us for another week and a day. We are spending a bit more time together than her sister and I did, but she too will be gone again all too soon.

The 'i' key is out of whack on this thing, hitting about 50%. I don't type all that swiftly in the first place, but this is ridiculous.

One way around the problem would be to bypass any word spelled that way, but the syntax would get confused. So, I guess I will just keep on hitting the 'i' key until it works. Of course, it wouldn't hurt to choose my words, too.

Just to make Daf less self conscious about her accident, I rear ended a solid steel pickup truck which crushed the front end of my Hyundai with the steel plate it had sticking out of its truckbed. Close examination revealed no damage to the steel plate. I was only going about 5 mph at the time, but even at that speed, running into a 1/2" blade is much more than a Hyundai is designed to handle.

I've been driving a rental for the past two weeks while the Hyundai has been in the shop. A Mercury Sable. It is an attractive car to look at, and it has more power than I appreciate. For all of that, it seems a bit claustrophobic on the inside. I guess it doesn't have as much glass surrounding the driver as I have accustomed myself to with the Hyundai. The part about the power becomes evident on the freeway, when I find myself feeling held back by traffic despite sailing along at 60 or 65.

I get the Hyundai back tomorrow, so I will get to relearn to drive it all over again.

Saturday we went to the IBU picnic. Daf's office, and some union patrol people. There was a horseshoe tourney with a nifty trophy that one of union people made for the event. I was shut out in the first round by a series of three ringers (we were playing to a total of 9 points in that round). To show how truly remarkable that was, there were only 7 ringers in the entire tournament. I guess the guy who took me out spent it all on me. The guy who won it did it twice with a ringer on his final throw, to save the game. Each time, his opponent had scored enough to win, only to have it stolen by a magic throw.

We decided to take the ferry home, and missed one by about 6 cars. The next ferry was at 11:45, so we got to Seattle sometime past midnight and home a bit before 3:00 am. The next day we awoke to the intruder alarm. Chris had gone outside, having forgotten to turn it off.

This is the list of those who are getting MAGUS. To be on this list, you have to play, standby, or have some other quality that makes me want to send this to you. What that quality might be, I leave to your imagination.

1987 AL Euro Style Spring 1913

Rick Kohman was the first to send in the missing MAGUS issues, but he forgot to send in any moves. So, I am asking Don Williams to send in standby orders for the French units. I don't know if Rick thought he had sent me orders with the MAGUS or not, but I know how easily aging hippies get confused.

There is a concession to France and a concession to Germany proposed.

GM to BO(T): Say something nice to the folks.

BO(T)-BOOB: Since I voted for F/G the last few times I can't say I'm causing Steve trouble at all. In fact, I'll vote for any result that doesn't include you, you sad sack of...

GM to BOOB: I'm sure that that is no longer operable considering that he kept Rumania due to you, but in case he's a slow study...

BO(T) - RIKKO: It's people like you who cause burn out for us "old farts".

GM to BOT: That can't be right. NMRs cause burnout? Nah!!!

It has been raining, hard, since I set down to start this. At a guess we are a couple of inches into a pretty decent storm. There has been a bit of thunder but it's too light out for there to be any sign of lightning. Still, it gives you pause. If this is summer, what will winter bring?
