Issue #22

September 1992

Circulation: 75

It's been a busy month catching up on all of the mail that accumulated during my vacation in July. I'm hoping to see the bottom of the pile during Labor Day weekend. Then, everything should be back on track (I hope).

The biggest news is that I've bought an IBM computer. I was going to be needing one that was compatible with the system that being be installed at work, so I went looking. I finally ended up (for those who are interested) with a Packard Bell Legend 750 Supreme (486SX/25) with a VGA monitor, mouse, 2400 baud modem, both 3 1/2" and 5 1/4" drives and most importantly an Epson 5000 24-pin printer. The printer should make RAMBLING WAY much easier to read!!

The preloaded software is a LotusWorks package; however, I'm planning on installing WordPerfect 5.1 and either PageMaker or Ventura desktop publishing software. This (along with the new printer) will result in changes in RW format, game reports and such.

I'm going to take it slow as I don't want to delay RW because I'm not able to handle the software. That is the primary reason I'm using my Commodore for this issue. I don't want to sacrifice the content or turnaround time for fancy presentation (though I do want to spruce up the game reports as soon as possible adding such things as lost/gained supply centers, computer underlining and such).

This issue has two more game starts. One is a Gunboat with Press, while the other is an International Game. I decided to go with three in the US as they are widely seperated (Maryland, Texas and Washington) and the game had been pending for quite awhile.

Speaking of game openings, Cal White's NORTHERN FLAME has two regular Dip games open, a Flintlock II game and an 1885 variant. He also runs FACTS IN FIVE games, which I thoroughly enjoy. To inquire about NF or obtain copies of the variant rules, write to Cal at 1 Turnberry Ave.; Toronto, Ontario, CANADA M6N 1P6.

I'd also like to strongly recommend PERELANDRA, the winner of this year's Runestone Poll. It is an excellent publication -- Pete Gaughan (1521 S. Novato Blvd., #46; Novato, CA 94947) deserves the honor. Check out issue #100 which includes a comprehensive review of the first one hundred issue, a top-notch report of DipCon (with PICTURES -- see just what all these folks look like) and plenty of games.

DISCLAIMER: Diplomacy is published and copyrighted by The Avalon Hill Game Company, Baltimore, MD. It was invented by Allan Calhamer.

SUBSCRIPTION: Cost per issue is $1.00 in the US, $1.25 for those in Canada. Other country's rates set as needed. Trades are welcome, just contact the editor for details. Back issues $1.00 each.

Samples are free, though a stamp or two is appreciated.
GAME FEES: A $5.00 NMR fee is collected for each game. It is refundable if you play the game until completion or your elimination. A subscription to RAMBLING WAY is necessary to play.

SUBSCRIPTION LISTS: A complete, up-to-date, player list is available at any time for a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

HOUSE RULES: The second edition is available upon request. All games except RW #1 are, or will be, run using version 2.1.

Turkey: Come on you infidels, can't you tell when the war's over? Who voted against F/R draw? Why?

(Paris): Sultan Jim the Waning, exercising the tact that has made Turkey famous, managed to insult every nation remaining on the board. Le Pin is crazy, Emperor Jim is an idiot, and Czar Peter has no sense. How strange it is that there exist leaders who do not ALWAYS stab their allies! Count your marbles, Sultan Jim, and when they are gone, come have some tea.

A/H-Fra: I accept your fine offer, oui, oui!

A/H-Rus: ditto, your orders make sense.

A/H-Tur: I shall NOW try to gain territory.

Rus-Eng: The hun has been uncooperative. Our fleet in the gulf will continue its shore bombardment of Stockholm. Of course, I would have felt better if F Nwy had supported my effort in Sweden, even if it would have been cut.

Rus-Ita: Our new government is willing to open its doors to the Pope. We welcome the establishment of a cathedral in Moscow. We will do our best to push the infidels of the Ottoman out of Europe. Perhaps the Bourbons will rise again in France and chase out the agnostic rulers of the Republic.

Rus-Aus: Thanks for the help. I'll do my best to help you.

Rus-Tur: We appreciate your helping the people's revolution oust the Tsar and the return of our southern port following our successful revolution. We send our regrets concerning the death of the Sultan. We pray for peace between our nation and a long reign for the heir to the throne.

Rus-Ger: The attempt at leaving our northern port has been observed and applauded by the people's army. Please note that the Barents Sea should be free of ice this time of year.

(Italy) Palazzo Viento, Rome: "Monsignor, it is reported that French soldiers are deserting their armies in droves!"

"Yes, my son, it is clear they desire to protect their homes more than the French government does. We pray the English and Germans continue their conflict on French soil, forcing France to retreat from ours."

"Milord, the Austrians are still unwilling to cooperate with us."

"Ah, Montessori, it is unforunate that we smaller countries can not unite against our stronger neighbors. Give Austria another chance to open his eyes to the grim reality of Turkey's aggressive expansion. Look what cooperation did in Sevastapol."

"Yes, milord, I shall approach them again, pointing out the pacifico attempts by our army to vacate Tyrolia."

"I should like to know the intenciones of the new ruler of Turkey. Will he advance against us as the foolish French did, or will he learn from their lesson? Does he really want to face Russian and Austria and us all at once?"

"I shall make inquiries, milord."

Lon-Mos: "Germany's growth must be stopped. I'll support you into Sweden in the fall if I am in position to do so."

Lon-Ber: "As long as you build no more fleets I will not dock in any of your home ports. If you do build a boat you'll get a full broadside from my warships."

Lon-Rom: "We have many complaints of our beautiful ladies of London. They are all complaining of an Italian who couldn't keep his hands to himself. Montessori must mind his manners if he should ever return to London!"

Lon-Ank: "We wish to express our great sorrow at the passing of the previous sultan. May the reign of the present sultan last as long as your camels stay healthy."

Ger-Eng: I propose a 3 year peace treaty. You can have Portugal, Spain, Brest, Paris and Marseilles if you give me Norway and declare North Sea and Norwegian Sea a neutral zone (no fleets of either side allowed). If you wish, two of my armies will be put at your disposal for your invasion of France (army Belgium and Munich). Just indicate their orders the turn before. I look forward to working with the terror of the north.

Notes

- 01) Germany's orders arrived shortly after the deadline. Thanks to the standby. A standby is being called for England this turn.

Except where otherwise indicated, the views and opinions expressed herein are solely mine and are not necessarily those of the Department of State or any other U.S. Government agency.

In August 1990, Karl Schoenberger wrote a column for the Los Angeles Times that was carried in the 16 August Japan Times. Schoenberger wrote, "Five decades after Tokyo joined the Berlin-Rome Axis, sensitivities about the old fascist military alliance are still raw among the victims of World War II aggression. Moreover, the means by which Japan and Germany are coming to grips with their past are poles apart. This distinction may have profound consequences as the Japanese superstate attempts to gain the trust of suspicious neighbors and wary trading partners. Both Germany and Japan face intermittent pressure from old foes to repudiate past acts of territorial aggrandizement. But while Germany is tormented by guilt and generally expresses unequivocal contrition, Japan still tends to see itself more as a victim than a perpetrator - or at least as a lesser villain, culpable but with mitigating factors....A revisionist view that Japan was forced into war by the United States is common among Tokyo's conservative elite. Conquests in the 'Greater East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere,' the theory holds, were no more sinful than Western colonialism."

Alan Booth wrote, in the 12/04/91 Asahi Evening News, "To young people here, apparently, it has come as something of a shock to learn that the Pacific War did not begin with the B29 firebomb raids on Tokyo and the invasion of Okinawa by U.S. marines, and that several crucial events are now known to have preceded those calamities....I was moved this autumn to contemplate the ways in which Japan commemorates selected events of the Pacific War while on a visit to the south coast of Okinawa, where the worst of the fighting in what was surely the worst land battle of the Pacific theater, and perhaps the entire global catastrophe, took place. Certainly, the battle for Okinawa was the most destructive of civilian life. Approximately 150,000 civilians are believed to have perished in just under three months of fighting, more of them at the hands of the Imperial Army (or at their own hands with strong encouragement from the Imperial Army) than at the hands of invading U.S. forces..."

Booth continued, "Of the 150,000 or more civilians who died, 167 belonged to the Himeyuri Butai, a nursing corps consisting of 223 girls of high school age, made famous by a 1950 novel about their deaths called "Himeyuri no To" ("The Tower of Lilies") and a 1953 film version of it by the late Tadashi Imai. The site of these girls' deaths, many by suicide, in a cramped complex of pits and caves is an eloquent reminder of the disasters of war, and one of the most frequently visited by busloads of Japanese tourists. I watched the tourists as they arrived in front of the pits. Their guides encouraged them to incline their heads there for about three seconds and then whisked them off to the large new "Himeyuri no To Brand Plaza" next door, where they could buy souvenirs of their visit....I've seen some examples of crassness in my time, but I think that the Himeyuri no To Brand Plaza will remain in my memory for as long as I have one. And yet the bus guides shepherding their charges between the Cartier bracelets and Louis Vitton bags showed every sign of expecting them to take the horror commemorated there seriously. It seemed to me at the time, and seems to me now, a remarkable demonstration of the obtuseness with which Japan parades its selected memories of the war around, inviting native and foreigner alike to exclaim "How terrible!" "How sad!" and of the utter vacuity of such memories when unrelated to historical cause and effect."

Ita-Tur: Nothing personal...it's just that your turbans clash with my fashion statement

Fra-Ita: I broke off my attack on Eng so that I could prevent an Austrian win. I did not move anti-Italian. Why you wish Austria to win is beyond me. I have the utmost faith in my English ally. If however he stabs me this turn, my dots are your dots.

Fra-Ger: Don't mention it. Anything to stop the Austrian.

Austria: As we tried to explain in our Fall 1905 press, which was garbled in transmission [GM-sorry], Austrio-Hungarian forces shall only advance into areas which the Emperor considers to be already threatened by external forces.

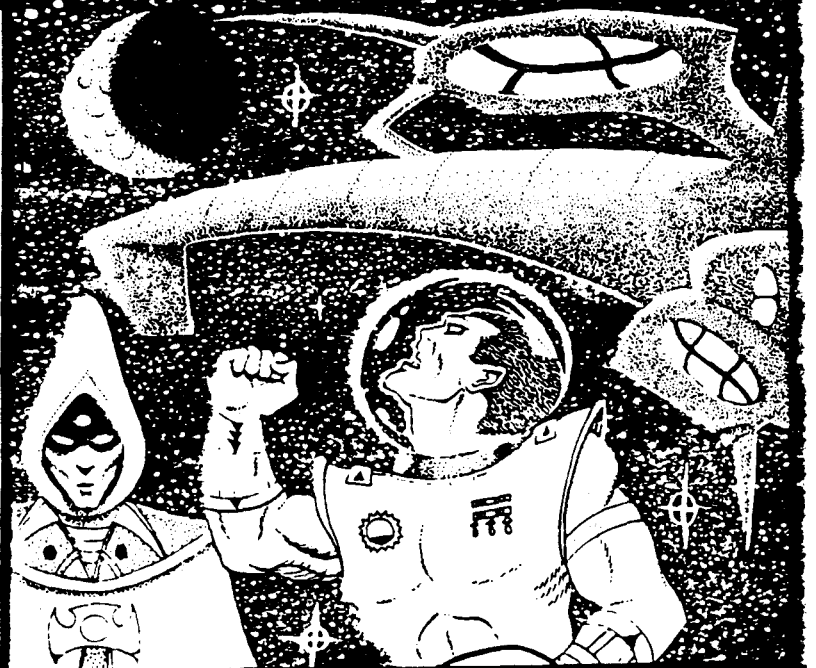

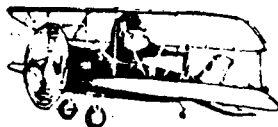

We have identified Asia Minor as one such area and we intend to restore order to it promptly.

STARWEB™

STARWEB ...is a multi-player, hidden movement, play by mail strategic space game. You capture planets, build space fleets, collect ancient artifacts, negotiate with other players and attempt to build a space empire. There are 255 star systems in the game, and you start with knowledge of only one. You don't even know how many other players are in the game until you meet them! Once every three weeks, you mail your instructions for the turn to us. We run the turns through our computer, and mail you a printout describing what happened to your empire that turn. We have been running play by mail games since 1970, and currently have well over 2000 opponents around the world. For a copy of the rules and more details, send $2. or send $8 for a package of the rules to ALL our pbm games. For a copy of our free catalog, just send us your name and address. Please do not ask to be in a STARWEB game until after you have seen the rules.

THE BRAZILIAN TIMES

by Luis Claudio Duarte

This country has recently housed ECO-92, a world summit on ecological affairs. The site for the summit was Rio de Janeiro, Brazil's second largest city and our capital from the 17th century to 1960. The security measures for the summit caused a very curious situation.

Rio is today a besieged city. There are a great number of slums ("favelas") - not only around the city, but even inside it. These slums are completely dominated by organized crime, involved mainly with drugs and gambling. Thanks to the corruption and inefficacy of the government, the slums are lacking many services (medical care, for instance). So, the gangsters themselves furnish these services to the population. The result: the slums have become virtual independent states within the city.

The police and the judges are almost completely corrupt. The average citizen is as afraid of the police as of the gangs, for there are many policemen who are criminal themselves.

So, what happened during ECO-92? The Brazilian Army has its largest contingent in Rio. The Army and the other armed forces, as well as the Federal Police, were used in force as security troops during the summit. Naturally, the crime rates dropped dramatically. So, there are now a great many citizens asking the armed forces to take over the city!

The Army High Command does not wish to do this, however, for it thinks - correctly - that the Army would become as corrupt as the police in a matter of months, since the average pay of the military is now very, very low. But the liberal circles of Brazil are alarmed with this popular cry - it seems that the people prefer to have storm troopers suffocating liberty in order to save their properties - and their skins.

Two interesting notes: Brazilian law forbids citizens to have weapons of .38 caliber or greater (of course, the criminal gangs are better armed than the police); and Rio's Chief of Police, when asked about measures to reduce crime rates, answered that the police were preparing a series of meetings with the population of the slums in order to make them happier. The police are not used in ostensive patrolling, but concentrates on traffic control and other activities. The Governor says that crime isn't a police matter, but exclusively a social one. So, the population is forbidden to defend itself and abandoned by the forces it maintains with its taxes. In the near future, there is no chance for Rio again become the "Cidade Maravilhosa" (Wonderful City).

LAKE GENEVA FREEDOM MUSIC RADIO: Greetings Loyal Followers, and welcome once again to another edition of "Europea Expose'D." Our top story concerns the rumours of an Anglo-Russo alliance. While the world awaits any indication of this, your friend, Hans, went personally to the office of English spokesman, Iva Biggen, in London. When I asked Mr. Biggen of this, he assured me that "the English have no interest in Russian or Scandinavian affairs." He then helped himself to breath mints - the pickled herring smell was making me noxious. When I asked of his relationship to Lilly von Schtupp, he became pale and excused himself. He could not be reached for further comment, and our sources later saw his Audi racing to his summer home in Middlesex.

You will hear more of this story in the next edition. For Freedom Music Radio, this is Hans Onerrmuff in Lake Geneva, saying goodnight and may you never have dots in your eyes.

POLL QUESTION

Note: my comments within individual responses will be in "[ ]".

Regarding "Rap Music" (August 1992):

John Breakwell: If musicians feel so annoyed they advocate murdering people then there is obviously something seriously wrong and the powers that be should listen. Happy people do not sing about police brutality and racism so these lyrics must be a reflection of social injustice. There is no point punishing these people as censorship will only exacerbate the situation. Freedom of speech would hopefully oil the wheels of change.

WAY: Well, I agree that censorship isn't necessarily the solution. However, I feel that each right (such as that to free speech) brings with it a responsibility. If what a person says (or sings) has a direct causal relationship to another individual's actions, the speaker should be able to be held accountable. To what extent, and whether the promoters, distributors and such share in the accountability is something I haven't decided in my mind.

September's Question: "Assuming Quayle isn't the Republican VP candidate; who should it be?"

John Schultz: That's an easy one. Baker would guarantee a Republican victory. I sure hope they don't wise up. The Dems might not be able to fix things but it's sure the Reps can't. Too much more of them and we're headed for class war.

Stephen Glasgow: I read the Sec. Defense Cheney and Gen. Colin Powell are popular choices, but not with me. Choosing either would indicate Bush is still more concerned with the rest of the world than with our own problems. I don't know much about Sec. Housing Kemp, except he may alienate part of the ultra-conservative Republican base. Didn't Sen. Dole of Kansas make a bid for the Republican nomination in a past election? [Yes, he has run before]. He could bring some support to the ticket. How about Rostenkowski -- of course he'd have to shorten his name to "Rosty" so it would fit on campaign buttons under "Bush."

WAY: Personally, I would have liked to see Baker. However, I don't feel Quayle is that bad a leader -- he's just received a plenty of 'bad press' which makes him a potential liability to the Republican ticket. Cheney and Powell I think are being kept in the wings and will be brought out in 1996 if Quayle's image doesn't improve. I think that they wish to keep them out of any potential political blunders which would harm their future chances for Presidency. Could you see them as together on a ticket? A sure winner.

Question for October: There has been quite a bit of finger pointing about the response the devastation Hurricane Andrew wrought in Florida and Louisiana. Do you feel it is justified (Feds, state, or local), or was the destruction so widespread and complete that it overwhelmed the system?

MY SUMMER ODYSSEY

After a hectic June catching everything up at work (and home, for that matter), I was looking forward to my last day of work. When 5pm rolled around, I didn't waste any time in getting out of the police department. I left so quickly, the Chief of Police had to call me later that night to wish me a safe trip.

The next morning, I hit IH 35 northbound around 9:30 with a first stop in Austin. I had to pick up my game of EURORAILS that a friend of mine had borrowed and to grab a quick lunch. By 11:30 I was enroute to Waco and a visit to the Texas Rangers Museum.

I was looking forward to touring the Museum again, having seen it in the mid-80's. Since that time, a Ranger had been killed in the line of duty who was a close friend of one of my best friends. I wanted to see the displays about him, and to take photos for my friend. After a sobering visit, I headed north to Mesquite (just outside of Dallas).

I arrived in Mesquite a bit earlier than I had expected, so of course I stopped in the local game store. They have a mailorder service, and I buy a good percentage of my games from them. I didn't buy anything, saving my money for bigger and better things later.

Across the street from the store, there was a Ross Perot supporter who I stopped to talk to. At that time, Perot was a definite wildcard in the Presidential race, and I was interested in getting some information about him. Unfortunately, the person only had items for sale (buttons, shirts, etc.); however, she did tell me the address for the headquarters.

I headed over to another of my best friend's parent's house. His mother made an excellent chicken fried steak dinner and I went with his father and one brother to soccer tryouts (they are great soccer fans). I had a nice conversation with his dad that night, and in the morning with his mother - talking over super blueberry muffins. It was good seeing the whole family again and catching up on their doings.

My first stop on July 2nd was the Ross Perot HQ (being just off my route north). I had the cross street, but had a heck of a time finding the building. Finally, I went into a complex management office for directions. They were ready with an answer, it seems I wasn't the only one who had been lost. Armed with the actual address and directions, I started looking.

And I looked, and looked. I sought a sign, a banner, or a listing on the building directory to no avail. Finally, I turned to leave and caught a sign on the wall INSIDE an office across the large lobby. I'd finally found the elusive grail.

However, it wasn't what I expected. I asked at the desk for information and was sent upstairs to the actual headquarters area. I was readily greeted, but when I asked about positional papers and the ilk, the people directed me to long tables in the phone bank room -- and then excused themselves.

The tables were filled with photocopies of news articles from around the world, dozens of merchandise flyers and other promotional materials. Nothing like I was looking for. After wandering around the room for twenty minutes, I left knowing that Perot wasn't serious.

Northbound again, stopping in Oklahoma City for lunch. I was making good time, so instead of stopping in the Wichita area (the friends I was planning to visit were out of town anyways), I pressed on to Kansas City arriving around 7:30pm and checking in at the Howard Johnsons.

I received my room assignment -- in the Howard Johnson equivalent of Siberia (at least in relation to the gaming area). I drove around (yes, it was quicker to drive back and forth than to walk) and commenced unpacking.

After one trip up to the room, and with my head in the trunk, I was greeted by name (I'd been there five minutes, and Larry Peery had already found me). We chatted for a bit, and I then toted my suitcases, cooler and other items up to my room. I still needed to rustle up dinner and get settled.

After unloading, I headed down the street to find.....a Ponderosa Steakhouse. Now, I worked at one for three years after high school and hadn't been in one for quite some time -- Texas doesn't have them. Of course, I stopped and had dinner there.

Trying to fill-up my car after dinner was an experience. I stopped at a gas station (I don't remember which one), and tried my best to get the gas pumps to work -- and YES, the station was open. After struggling a bit, I stalked into the cashier's area to complain about the inoperative pump.

Well, I found out that in Kansas City, after 8pm you have to PAY before you pump -- a concept I had yet to experience anywhere in Texas. Needless to say, after I showed the clerk that I had plenty of money and credit cards, I had no trouble filling my tank up. Also, I vowed never to fill up after 8pm in the (ahem) great State of Kansas.

Upon arrival back to HoJos, I got together with Larry for a long chat. Having only talked with him once around Christmas '91, there were plenty of topics to discuss until 11:30pm when Gary Behnen and Shuttle 1 from the airport arrived.

Pete and Cathy Gaughan, Gary, Larry, myself, Steve Cooley and Don Del Grande headed out to find a place for the West Coasters to eat at. After a lengthy walking tour of closed establishments, we ended up at Denny's (practically across the street from the motel). Interesting conversation, hilarious discussions with the waiter and other patrons topped the night off.

In the morning, I had been invited to go with Larry to visit Truman tourist sights in Missouri. Not being a Truman fan, and being a Civil War buff, I decided to visit Lawrence, Kansas - site of the infamous Quantrill raid. However, before I headed out I decided to grab a quick breakfast at the HoJo eatery.

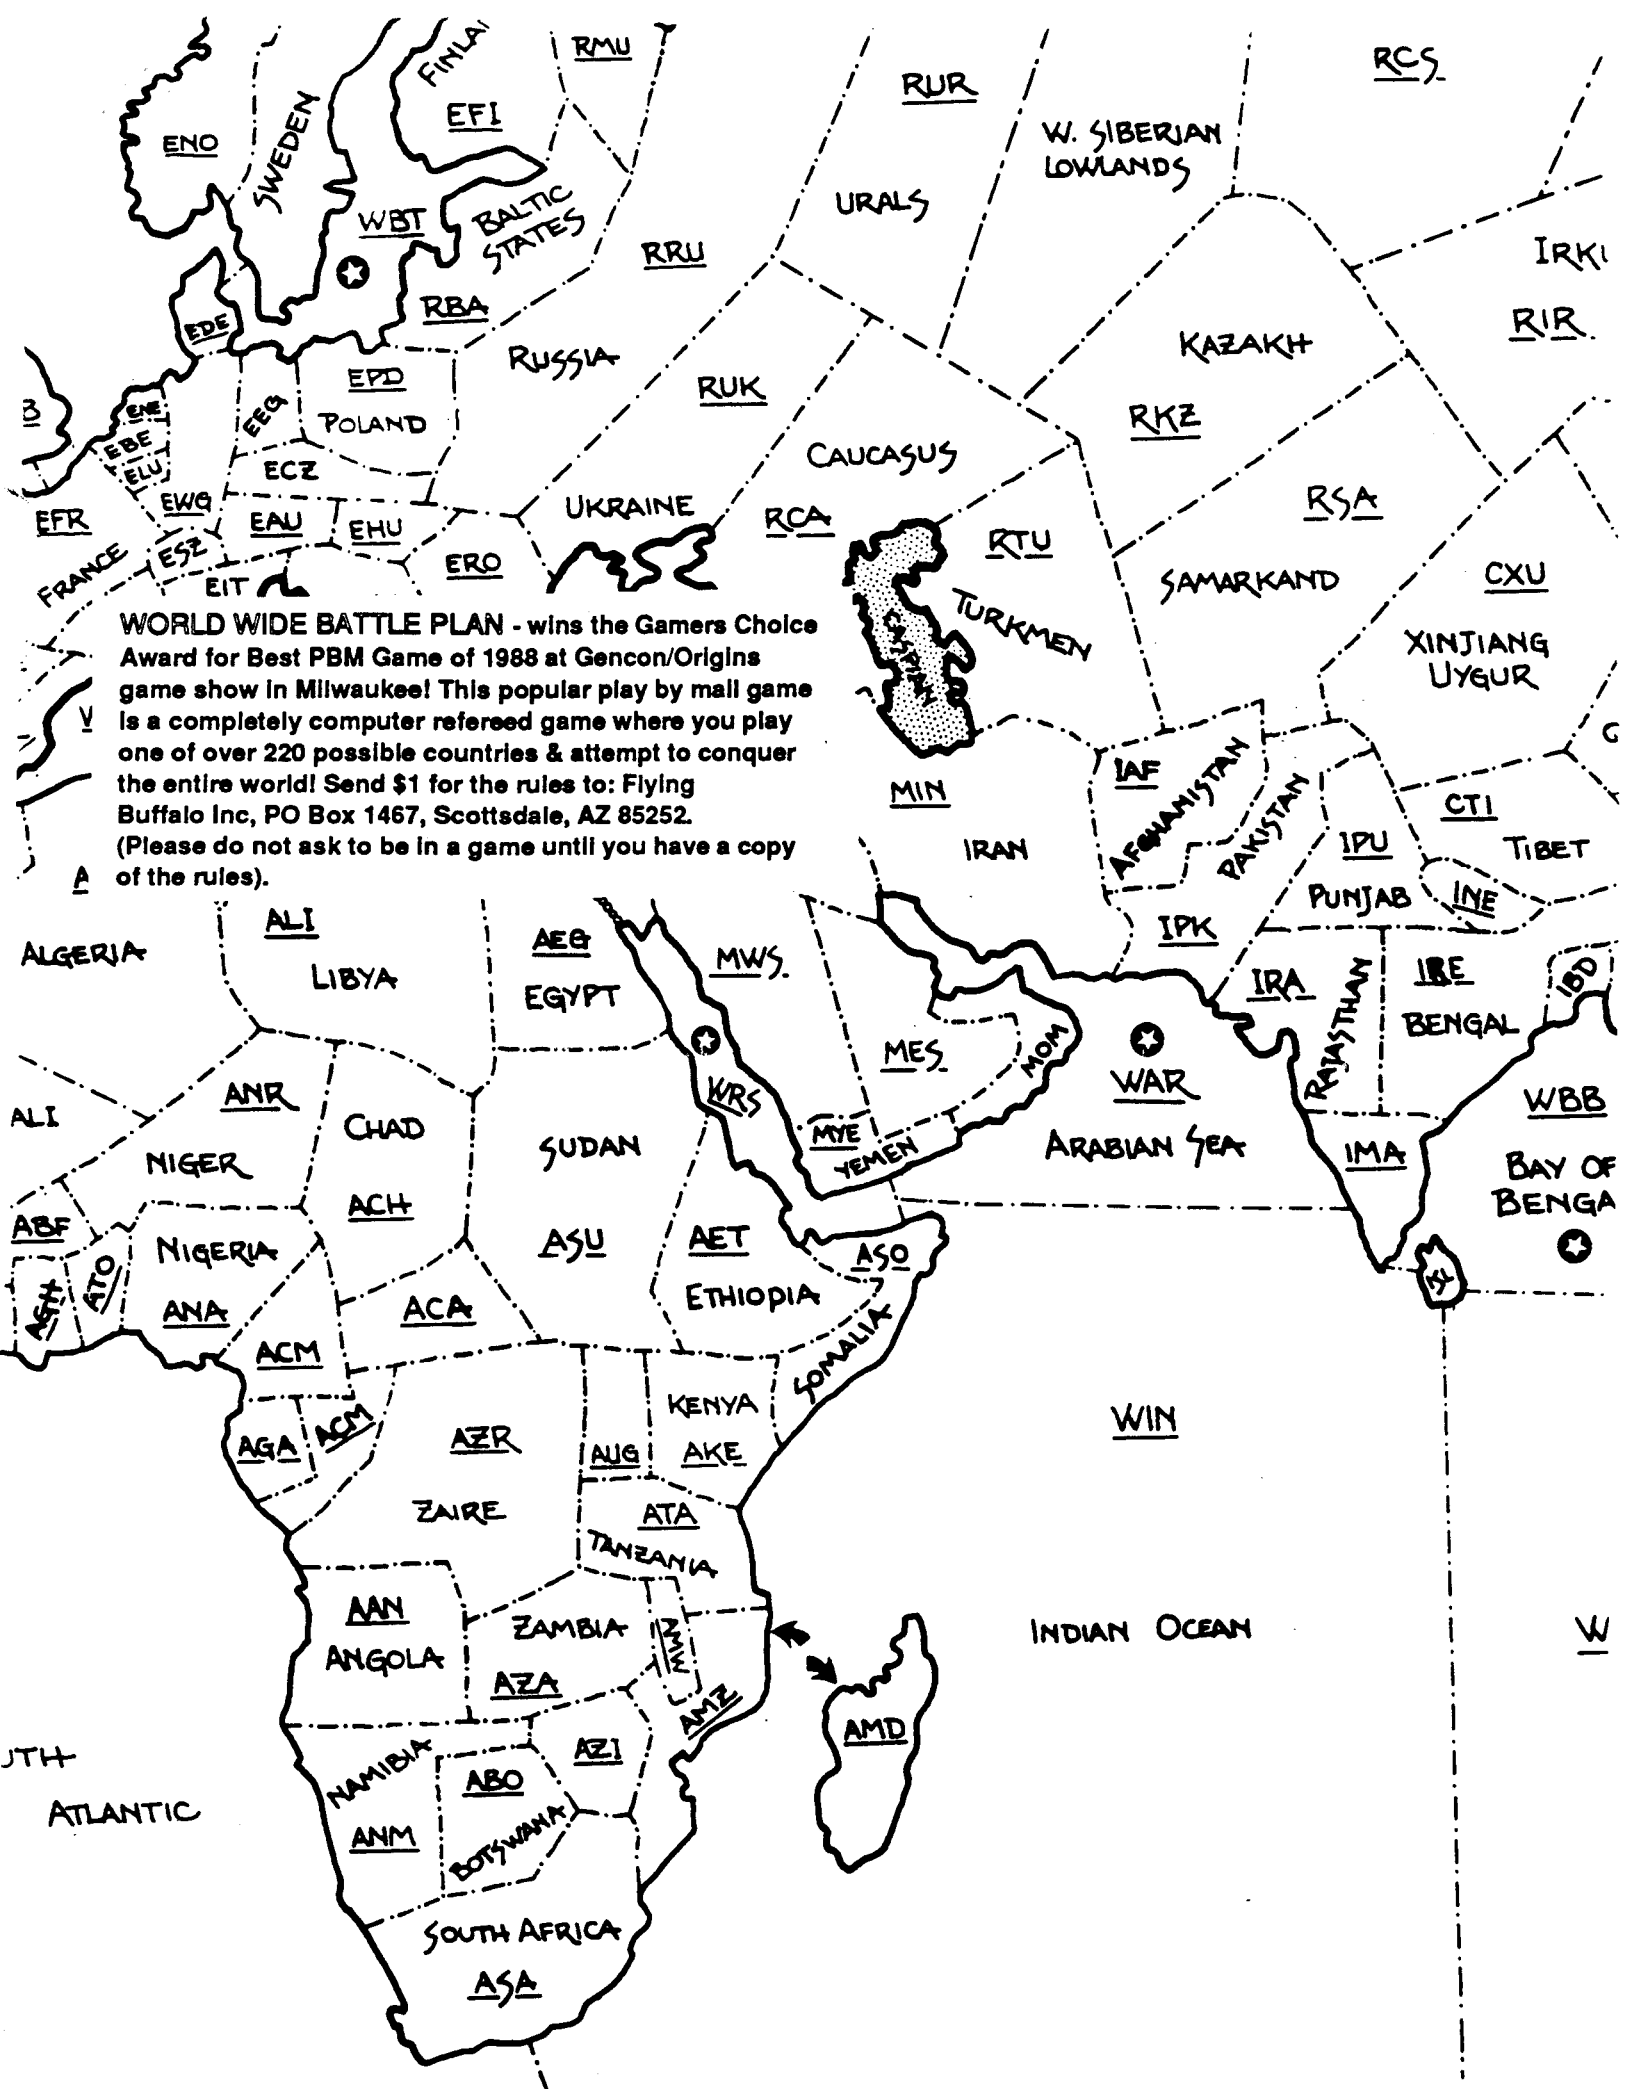

That was a BIG mistake. You would figure that they would be ready for a convention coming to town -- NOT!!! I must have spent an hour waiting for two scrambled eggs, sausage and toast. This "speedy service" plagued all DipCon attendees.

My visit to Lawrence was very interesting. There wasn't too much about the Civil War that I found; however, a small museum had some artifacts and material. I had an excellent lunch (filet of sole in champagne sauce) at the Eldridge Hotel -- one of the buildings burned in the raid (and pictured in at least one painting of the incident).

I discovered a unique bookstore (The Raven) which specialized in mystery books amongst other things. This bookstore reminded me of some I used to frequent in East Lansing, MI (another university town). It organized book signings and other special events such as mystery nights. I haven't found one like it in San Antonio, yet.

Upon my return to Kansas City, I was immediately hooked into a game of Acquire. I ended up a dismal fourth behind a field (in order) of Dave Hood, Melody Lutterbie and Jason Bergman; placing ahead of Pete Gaughan. This was followed by another marathon wait for dinner at the HoJo restaurant -- and anticipation of my first Dip game.
