MEIV PRESS: PERTH AMBOY: The archaeological community was rocked by the discovery announced by Professor Hubert Q. Entwhistle of Passaic State Junior College. It seems that when Professor Entwhistle was taking a summer vacation at Perth Amboy, New Jersey, he made the archaeological discovery of the decade. Professor Entwhistle was surfing the waters of the Atlantic, when the step came out of his rubber duckie. In the ensuing Panic of being in three foot water without his duckie, Professor Entwhistle stumbled against a strange underwater formation. Later while save on shore, Prof. Entwhistle directed a salvage operation to find out what this strange formation was. Up from the depths of the Atlantic came the remains of a wooden boat. Prof. Entwhistle later said that the boat had been protected from decaying by the polluted waters around Perth Amboy. The pollution killed all the normal decaying bacteria and other sea life which might have rotten the boat.

Among the objects found in the boat were artifacts which had on them what at first glance appeared to be Scandanavian runes. but these were later to be found out to be some other kind of runes. Professor Entwhistle has said that apparent age of the boat is older than recored time. At this time, arrangements have been made to attempt to place where the boat came from and how old it is.
