Turkey-Austria: OK, so you win, but you know what makes me feel the worst? It's not the 3 years of alliance that went down the drain, it's the fact that I was stabbed by someone who let Woody stab him! Yuk! How low have I gone?!

My favorite story is about the two Irishmen, Pat and Mike, who were great friends. When Pat got married, Mike spent his savings on an expensive bottle of whiskey to present to this friend, with every expectation of sharing it with him at Pat's wedding party. Instead, Pat was so taken with the thoughtfulness of Mike's gift, that he declared he was saving the whiskey for a "very special occasion." As time passed, there were several events worthy of drinking the whiskey; the birth of a fine son, the marriage of the son, the birth of a grandson, the silver wedding anniversary, but none of these were deemed "special" enough to warrant opening and sharing the bottle of whiskey. Alas, the day came that Pat was on his death bed and Mike was there to console him.

Nearing his last breath, Pat said, "Mike, you be remembering that bottle of whiskey you gave me when I got married."

"Aye, Pat, sure I do." replied Mike.

"Would you do me a favor when I die?"

"Sure."

"After I'm dead and buried, would you pour that whiskey over me grave?"

Mike thought about it a moment before replying, "Would ye be minding if I passed it through me kidneys first?"

EPILOGUE

Well, this is it. The last issue. It's been a long run for me. There have been ups and downs, but the overriding memory is of all the people I have received letters from and who have touched my life. It's been a good experience. I hope you have had fun. I have tried to do my best to serve you. Let me leave you with one last story, a woman enters a store and asks the clerk where to find the batteries. The clerk motions with his finger and says, "Come this way." The woman responds, "If I could come that way I wouldn't need batteries."
